PICKED UP ABOUT TOWN

Bill Williams has just cause for complaint. He says that when box cars are jammed so close to his mail car stand that he cannot get through, it is time that something be done to ameliorate the situation.

Frank Turner says that mail order catalogues are the bane of his official existence—that about a ton of each issue, from many different houses, are dumped on his postoffice a couple of times each month. And yet people are asked to trade at home.

That the Times is reaching out was shown by the receipt this week of a subscription from a former editor, W. H. Talcott, who wishes to keep wised up to the doings in this lively burg.

It is told of a certain well known sheep herder that, while sitting in a friend's auto last week and leaning over the starter, that his breath was so strong that it caused the machine to go ahead.

"Brick" McLeod has one spot in the highway indelibly engraved on his mind. Every time he goes by it he remarks: "That's the place I broke my collar bone."

Cecil Woodcock likes enjoyment, but the job's comforter he has been enjoying the past few days adds nothing to the kind of pleasure its victim is wont to enjoy.

Joe Kramer is afraid that when the campaign opens up in earnest there will be wailing and gnashing of teeth by radio owners. He says so much "hot stuff" will come from the air that all ground wires will be burned out.

If the trout don't begin biting before long we're afraid our son will insist that we hang up the rod and reel for this season.

Dad Richmond says that the guano shipping is all right, but sacking the stuff is worse than hay fever.

Clarence Alexander is of the opinion that lightning does strike more than once in the same place. His home resembles a hospital, being filled with ailing ones, taken down one after the other.

ABOUT WEIGHING PRODUCE Seller Should Be Given Chance To Observe The Scales

A farmer is entitled to know how his produce is weighed. He will count his money for wheat, corn, or livestock sold, and it is just as reasonable, says C. A. Briggs of the United States Department of Agriculture, for him to know how the scale is used in getting the weight.

In weighing a thousand-pound steer it is not difficult at times to weigh with a high balance so that the weight shown is ten pounds less than the correct amount, and usually this will go unchallenged. At a price of ten cents per pound the ten pounds mean $1, which is more than ample to cover the total of the yardage and feed charges for the animal at the stockyard. This is about 1 per cent of the price of the animal but it may represent 10 per cent of the net profit.

This matter of weighing with a high balance has been observed when the weighing was not done rapidly. In many cases, however, the weighing is done too rapidly. The onlooker does not know whether the weighing was done properly or whether the weight record is short ten or more pounds on the draft. In many cases the beam just starts to move when the weigher quickly arrests it by throwing the latch at the end of the beam, and the beam has not clearly indicated the balance. Often the farmer sees this and in his own mind questions the accuracy of the weight but for lack of confidence and want of knowledge he does not find himself in a position to raise any questions.

This quick weighing is wrong. The weighing should be done so that the character of the balance is apparent to any observer.

The proper manner to weigh is to balance the beam so that it has neither a high or low balance; that is, so that it swings evenly between the top and bottom of the loop. In type registering beams the weight indication changes in steps according to the type figures. In such cases the reading should be used which will bring the beam nearest to an even balance.

The Philadelphia of Our Ancestors

Here is shown a section of "High Street," a reproduction of Philadelphia's famous Market street in the days of 1776. It is one of the outstanding features of the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition now being held in Philadelphia to commemorate the 150th anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence. Every building has been built to actual size and in actual architectural detail. The furnishings of each building are exact reproductions of those used in the Revolutionary days. Many of the pieces on display are the originals and today are worth thousands of dollars because of their historic value. The Exposition continues until December 1.
