VANDALISM

Friday, a salesman from The Dalles had the misfortune to be spilled from his car, the vehicle turning turtle on the highway on Juniper Flat. While at a rancher's home after assistance he saw the occupants of three cars, each bearing a California license tag, divesting his crippled car of things movable. Hurrying to the road he secured the number of the cars and by phone had them stopped at Tygh Valley. Investigating his loss he discovered the battery, motor, some wiring and sundry other parts missing. The stolen parts were recovered at Tygh.

Such actions on the part of motorists are nothing but the workings of vandals. They are as bad as the man who calls on you to 'stick 'em up' at the point of a pistol, and more so, for in the first instance there is a threat of injury by non-compliance in the latter case the thieves work like a rat, which steals in the dark. Whenever such vandals are apprehended they should be given the full extent of the law and thus set an example for others of like instincts to heed.

Some of the remarks on education made by students in modern schools are about as empty of sense as is a discarded bird's nest filled with egg shells. To read some of the notes sent by some young girls to young boys leads one to suspect that all schools is for is to cultivate a desire for the company of the opposite sex.

'Crossing the Alps' is an old-time subject for graduation valedictorians. In this section it is crossing the hills bordering the Deschutes that occupies the time and minds of fishermen.

Chicken coops should be well ventilated, says the agricultural bulletin. It is evident that information has been broadcasted among the modern females, as a casual view of their costumes would suggest.

Now that winter has left us and old soil shines with increasing warmth we rise to suggest that it is time to shed the heavies and indulge in B. V. D.'s instead.

Last Friday was 'Straw Hat' day in Portland. The straw is an article of comfort; the 'High' hat being the one not in popular favor.

Airplane Ambulance Proves Value

The King Contest Is On
Interest runs high and competition waxes warm over the coveted honor of Maupin's May King. A number of well known men-about town, landed barons and scholars have already announced their intentions of entering the contest. Before their names can be given out to the reading public, it will be necessary to delve into their pasts to some extent, to ascertain whether or not they correspond with the rules and regulations governing this contest. Another prize has been offered by a local merchant, to-wit: one doz. post-holes, assorted sizes.
'Ont West, Where Men Are Men and Women 'Are Governors,' this sordid tale occurred. 'Tobacco Juice' Jackson cycloned down the main street. He was riding an carry-eyed bronc which could, without moving, unseat Buckskin Bill himself. For a hatband he sported a rattler, whose forked tongue slid glibly in and out with eerie swiftness. On one arm he held a screaming cougar, with the other arm he was lashing his mount with a wriggling rattler, similar to the one on his hat. With uncanny infallibility he spotted a bootlegger. In a fraction of a second he had dismounted and was spouting with steaming breath: 'Mix me a swig and make it hot, carbolic acid, nitroglycerine, moonshine and a dash of red pepper.' With one gulp he swallowed the stuff. 'Where d-d-did you hail from?' timidly and respectfully inquired Bill, the bootlegger, his green eyes drooping and his toenails a-quiver. 'Aw, I just left Tornado-ville. The tough guys run me out.'
