Power is the basis of industry. When power is curtailed industry suffers. It makes no difference whether that power is generated by water, from streams, from steam engines or electric motors, that power is the medium which moves the wheels of progress. It works in light, heat, motion and other phases of living, yet its uses and value are only in infancy.

There is an organized effort tending to the exclusion of powers companies on the Deschutes, Umpqua, Rogue and other rivers in Oregon. The argument is advanced that to allow power companies to dam those rivers for power plants would destroy the fishing pleasures of thousands of sportsmen.

Just when, we would ask, has those streams yielded aught but a few salmon to the enterprises of the state? How much have those streams added to the wealth of the state of Oregon, aside from the commercial fishing industry? Would it not be better that the streams mentioned be harnessed and thereby give employment to hundreds of men all the year around than to make them exclusive fishing grounds for part of each year?

Industry is the medium which keeps the country on its feet. Without industry panics would ensue; trade would be at a standstill and poverty and crime run rampant. Damming the streams mentioned means that industry would be given an added impetus and add to the state's treasury. More men would be given a chance to get the wherewithal with which to keep their families, educate their children and enjoy the delights of life. It seems to us that objecting to the improvement of Oregon streams by fishermen is a state as a whole. There are numerous fishing places in this state—sufficient to satisfy the most ardent follower of Izaak Walton.

Damming the rivers would not necessarily kill off the fish in them. The law says that fish ladders must be constructed to allow the free passage of fish over such dams. No fish would be killed, and thus sport would not suffer by such obstructions. Keep the streams open and they will be enjoyed by a few; dam them and allow power plants to operate through the force of the water and he whole state would benefit.

The action of a few fishermen who seek to obstruct the development of Oregon looks to us like saving the spigot and losing the bung hole.

Some corn belt farmers who have used sweet clover hay for silage are enthusiastic. Good silage can also be made from clover straw remaining after threshing the second-year crop for seed. In this case it will be necessary to add considerable water. Sweet clover straw is something like a by-product which might easily be wasted but which makes excellent feed when put into the silo.

In hog-raising sections of the country some of the larger packers pay a premium of 10 cents per hundredweight for hogs originating in "modified accredited" areas in the national campaign for eradication of bovine tuberculosis, such areas being those in which tuberculosis has been found to affect not more than one-half of one per cent of the cattle and in which all animals reacting to the tuberculin test have been removed from the herds. It is estimated that the returns from these premiums will amount to nearly $1,000,000 during the present year.

War has been declared on all scrub beef bulls, scrub mutton rams, and scrub boars in West Virginia by the West Virginia Cooperative Shippers' Association and other State farm organizations, which are offering money prizes to the three counties gaining the most points during an 11-month period. For every scrub beef bull castrated or shipped to market, 600 points are given; for a scrub mutton ram, 400 points, and for a scrub boar, 200 points. Scores bred animal in a county; for each beef bull, 500 points; for a mutton ram, 300 points; and for a boar, 100 points. To be considered purebred an animal must be eligible to registry in its breed association. The prizes are awarded with the understanding that the money is to be used for paying the expenses of the county agent to the International Livestock Exposition to be held next December.

Never subject earthenware dish to sudden changes of heat or you may crack it. Allow hot casseroles or baking dishes to cool gradually.

Use a thermometer in the meat when cooking rib roasts of beef, or leg of lamb. Then you do not have to guess whether the meat is well done or rare or medium. When the temperature at the center of a rib roast of beef is between 130 F., the meat is rare; between 150 F. and 170 F. it is medium; and it is well done at 180 F.

Sauerkraut has become such a popular article of diet in this country that we now produce about 18,000,000 gallons each year, the value of this amounting to over 3 million dollars. Sauerkraut has the same chemical composition as cabbage, the principal differences being that the added salt and acid resulting from fermentation largely replace the sugar of the cabbage. These changes make sauerkraut much more palatable than cabbage to many people and do not detract materially from its food value.

A very simple and practical method of trapping roaches in large numbers is to take several tin pans with vertical sides about 3 inches in height, greasing the bottoms and sides with rancid butter and placing the pans where the pests are most numerous. The roaches will be trapped in the pans because of their inability to climb up the greased sides, and may be destroyed by shaking out into a fire or boiling water. Commercial sodium fluoride dusted into their hiding places or runways is an effective means of poisoning them.
