Going Home
For Christmas
City Rutherford Morris

THE train sped on its way through the frozen country as if trying desperately to outstrip the furious fall of snow. Russell Hansford put aside his magazine to enjoy the spectacle and to meditate happily on this visit he was making to the old home town. It was the first since leaving abruptly ten years before in answer to the call of a wealthy bachelor uncle who wanted to train him for the management of his profitable business from which he hoped to retire within a few years.

None of the Hansfords now lived there, but Ridgewood, where he had grown to young manhood, would always be "home" to Russell. The glamour of business success had not dimmed his ardor for old associations. He loved every foot of ground in and around the town, as well as its inhabitants; but above all things else he treasured the memory of Lucy Miles, the sprightly little dark beauty whom he had loved and played with in childhood and with whom he had gone through the Ridgewood schools.

He had gone away without asking her to go with him as his wife, because his future, at that time, seemed very uncertain. He would get a good start, he planned, then go back for the dear girl. But Russell Hansford tarried too long over the job of getting ready. A strange man had come out of the West to win Lucy's heart, and had placed her beyond his hope. No other girl had ever interested him.

He sighed now as he reflected, and wondered if by any chance she, too, should be going back home for the holidays.

On and on the train dashed, his eager desire keeping pace with it, until suddenly he and all other passengers were thrown violently from their seats. Brakes screeched. All realized that there had been an accident.

An automobile had been struck on a crossing, the way being obscured, no doubt, by the heavy snowfall. The

"You!"

Injured were placed aboard the baggage car to be taken to the hospital at Ridgewood, only a few miles farther on.

At the station Russell made haste to lend aid, if possible, to the sufferers, and some one in the crowd was heard to say:

"It is John Miles and his sister."

Mrs. Gainsstone.

Russell's heart-beats seemed to stop short.

"Lucy!" he murmured to himself. He pushed forward to see. One glance at the upturned face was enough. "Yes, Lucy. And my train struck her down."

The homecoming meant nothing to him now; nothing unless he could bring comfort to the injured.

At the hospital he waited to learn the state of the patients and was told that John was not seriously hurt, but that Mrs. Gainsstone might not recover. She had not regained consciousness.

"Has her husband been notified?" he asked a little later.
