Insects destroy fortunes of one sort or another every year of the grains, fruit or vegetables. To offset their pernicious and destructive work several methods are used and science has them nearly controlled. A late number of Country Life says—The work has been going on for some years, and much progress has already been made. The cotton worm which formerly levied an annual tax of $30,000,000 on the cotton crop is now controlled by sprays; it has been proven that the ravages of the Russian fly, which sometimes have reduced the wheat acreage in Ohio 40 per cent and in Indiana 60 per cent besides greatly impairing the yield of the remaining acreage, can be considerably checked by planting wheat at seasons when the fly is not so rapacious; the codling moth is controlled by arsenical spray and $20,000,000 worth of apples saved as a result. The orange and lemon orchards of California have been relieved of the white scale which threatened to destroy them, by the importation from Australia of the ladybird, a natural enemy of the scale. Many other instances could be given of the wisdom of watching the insects.
