YOUNG LADY RUNS ENGINE TO MAKE LEONARD'S BEST

The following article which appeared in the Portland Commercial Review, shows that Leonard's Best need not necessarily be considered a brand of flour, but in this case it was a very determined and resourceful young lady. If the flour has the high standard of excellence which the young lady evidently possesses it ought to win instant favor.

"Garfield, Wash.—F. G. Leonard, who owns and operates the Garfield Flour Mills, was busy last week getting out a big order of flour for San Francisco, when his engineer quit and the mill was about to stop until another could be found. Mr. Leonard was hurrying to get the order out, and had no time to look up an engineer. Miss Mabel, his 18-year old daughter learning of the predicament her father was in, and knowing something about engineering, went to the mill, took charge of the engine, and stayed with it until the big San Francisco order was put out.

The ghosts, of which there were two present, expressed their thanks for being allowed their freedom on this one night of the year. This is a good record, but the Clarkes undoubtedly worked and earned the money. Most any one can do as well on the right farm and with some practical farm knowledge and plenty willingness to work.
