SHEEP-RAISING ON IRRIGATED LANDS

> are generally the best of mothers, and grieve over their dead lambs in a way to make your heart ache. On the cries of starving orphans that you hear one the range. My first sheep was one of these orphans. We made was one of these orpnans. We made one visit to the lambing ground, and that was all I ever wanted. I can hear those cries yet, and the time will come when such things will not be tolerated. There will be laws to cover this, just as there is for feeding and watering stock in shinning. These nd watering stock in shipping. These orphan losses in a financial way are also favorable to ranch sheep. We al-ways have a few for some unavoidable reason, but we raise them on cow's milk like a calf. Rangemen tell me it is better to have lambs some later, so they will have green grass to eat, and that they do better. We do not find it so. The lambs will begin to nibble at the hay when three or four days old, and soon eat as well as their mothers. They are all started and care for themselves when spring work is on, when most farmers are worked to death. The rangemen forget that when they are lambing that is all they have to do, while a farmer has many other things to attend to.

> Conditions Differ. I find in nearly every way that sheep on the ranch and range are en-tirely different businesses. The range man, from a money point of view, juslets his orphans die, loses stray sheep in the brush without bothering about it, and the sick must get well them-selves or die. But such methods on the ranch would be a disgrace. We will expect to keep a better grade, or even pure breds, and so cannot afford such losses. Here is where I suffered. When I started in on sheep, only one man that I knew of was handling them man that I knew of was handling them on the ranch, and I had no one to ask advice of when in trouble except the range man, and all he knew was to let them die. I could do that without any help, so just had to blunder along reading all I could find in papers on the subject and studying my own. I forgot to say how little I knew of stock, and of farm work except what I had read, until I came to the ranch here eight years ago. I scarcely knew

Sheep Vary.

Before I give my figures I would like to say that my sheep are the ordinary scrub, range sheep, that I have picked up anywhere from one to half a dozen. They are all sizes, and coarse and fine wool of all grades. The one trouble in getting started on the ranch is that range men don't want to sell a is that range men don't want to sell a hundred or two, so you have to pick them up wherever you can. So mine are in no way a selected lot. This simply emphasizes what I said above about my making any profit. Purebred sheep or good grades, like any other stock, will pay better than scrubs, and I can say right here I don't intend to always have scrubs; but they proved both cheap and profitable, and are especially good to pracin stock must expect some losses.

I will only give my last three years' receipts: -Average fleece, 10 pounds, at 15 tc. $1.55. -Average fleece, 7 pounds, at 20c, $1.40.

This is a bad showing, as every year my average was lower, but let me explain. In 1905 my sheep were all good ewes, only one old range sheep in the lot, and that sheared 4½ pounds. They averaged just a trifle less than 10 pounds. The next year I made a bad break buying some old range pelters. I figured that the wool and lamb would pay the bill and would not count the old sheep anything. But it didn't pan out. They only sheared 4½ and 4½ pounds, and some died, more had no lambs, and what lambs there vere did not amount to anything These old pelters evidently came west in the '60s, and it makes me swear like sixty when I think of them. It was a bad deal, and no farmer should buy one at any price. An old, worn-out range sheep is the nearest thing to nothing at all there is on earth.

Result on Lambs.

There were also a number of lambs about a year old or less. This brought my average down to seven pound The next year was the same, onl lots more young lambs. My propos tion of very young and very old was away above the average, so it dropped to 6½ pounds. This is just the aver-age sheep fleece in the United States, Idaho going a trifle better. 1906—Lambs $2.75, wool $1.40, $4.15 1907—Lambs $3.00, wool $1.24, $4.24 The lambs were sold to local butchers in Nampa and Boise, and weighed from 75 to 100 pounds. The average income for three years was $4.15, or call it $4 even up. This is counting lambs at 100 per cent increase; it will average close to that with care. This does not count losses of ewes, o which there will be an occasional one Now, we find we can pasture 13 sheep on an acre, and one acre of al falfa, counting four tons of hay to acre, will winter 20 sheep, and thi hay land will also furnish pasture if the spring while regular pasture if getting a start, and also in the fall These two acres, one of hay and on of pasture, will keep an average of 16½, or say 16, sheep the whole year, or eight to each acre, and an income of $4 each sheep makes $32 income

Another thing, these sheep harvest their own crop on three out of every five acres. Now, every farmer knows it costs good money and lots of sweat

o put hay in the stack.

One of the strongest points in sheep raising is they are so little work o trouble most of the time. For abou eight months they will run on pasture You only have to keep a little water running and corral them at night When evening comes mine are all in or close by, and all there is to do i shut the gate and open it in the morning. Even this is not necessary if you have a coyote-tight fence, but we sleep better when they are corralled and most of them like to go into their
