Ingenious Spider Web. Spiders have a number of ingentous ways of alluring and catching their prey. A writer describes an American spider which haunts evergreen trees, and snares its dinner by means of a kind of lassoo. The web of the spider is triangular in form. Two corners of the triangle are attached to twigs, but the other corner, which ends in a single thread, is held by the spider, perched on a neighboring twig. When a fly strikes the web the spider loos ens his hold and the elastic threads instantly entangle the victim.

Tom Browne, Celebrated English A tist, Meets Suspicious Negro Glass Chewer

Tom Browne, the celebrated English numorous artist, may be said to have had no education whatever in drawing. He educated himself. What he saw he drew, and his genius made it a picture. He did go to an art school at Nottingham for a couple of terms, and it was a good school in its way. Anyhow, he grew tired of the cutand-dried methods obtaining there-of the restraint, as he once put it to me -and so with about a dozen other would-be artists he took a room over some stables and there drew and painted from "life." They took it in turns to procure models-a tramp, a newspaper boy, a flower seller, anybody who wanted to earn a quarter served their purpose.

One night Tom, scouring the neighborhood for a subject, lighted on a negro who earned a living by chewing glass in public houses. This nice gentleman was asked if he would come to the loft to be painted. He looked at Browne earnestly for ome moments and, evidently laboring under the impression that the natural hue of his body was to be altered, he demanded: "Will it come off, sah?"

Pretty ideas don't always appeal to the experts in hygiene. Kissing, for example, is dangerous, and even that sand provided for children in the parks is not so innocent as it looks. The sand-hopper, with which children are so familiar on the real seashore, is replaced, according to the gloomy experts, by another kind of hopper. The sand, in a word, when the children have played architects with it for a time adds crittiness to grittiness. This is not necessarily a reflection on the children or the children's parents, for sand, like loose hay and straw, seems to produce crits out of no where. But, after all, sand can be renewed at small cost, and if the economists shout too loud let them be in-vited to take the old sand. It will be as good and critless after that as when it was new .- London Chronicle.
