Waist long pigtails were the fash-ionable wear in England about 1749, and before that the bag wig had been adorned with a pigtail looped up in a black silk bag. As late as 1858 an old gentleman was seen in Loudon with his gray hair tied behind in a short cue, and even today one can find a relic of the pigtail, for the three pieces of black velvet on the dress tunics of officers in the Royal Weish Fusileers are the remains of the ribbon with which the cue was tied.
