T. R. is having a session now with Standard Oil and its agents over campaign contributions. Archbold says T. R. knew that the $100,000 the company gave to the national committee, in 1904 was contributed by the Rockefeller interests, while T. R. says the moment he heard about it, he ordered the money returned. The revelations will make for promotion of publicity of campaign funds.

The Single Taxers are amply supplied with Fels money. Booklets of 158 pages giving Clackamas County assessments and taxes have been sent out to every voter in the state and soap box orators are busy on street corners at Portland. It is up to the opponents of the single tax to get into the field otherwise tax advocates may possibly win a chance to try the scheme on some county. It will be a sorry day if they do.

Hitting Country Merchant.

Two solicitors selling stock for a mail order house, proposed to be located at Portland, were in Estacada last week and may be around this section yet, singing a siren song of immense profits and no risk to those who will listen. So far as known they sold very little stock in Estacada and should not have sold even that much. But, if the statement of a Portland dealer in stocks for various enterprises may be believed, Estacada and vicinity, is a prolific source of revenue for stock jobbers.

Scarcely a week passes that smooth-looking pairs of unctuous solicitors haven't canvassed the town. They generally depart smiling broadly, to pass the word along to the next pair. From mining stock distant town lots, self blowing safes, to building and loan association monkey wrenches and mail order stock, the public has been digging up with a confidence which may some day be sadly jarred.

Why anybody in a country town should buy stock in a mail order house is perhaps a little beyond the understanding of The Progress. Business men in a small town find the mail order house with its deceptive catalogue and shoddy goods, a thorn in their sides and a continuous patronage of that institution will mean, in time, the elimination of the country merchant. When it becomes necessary for the public to do all its trading by mail or express it will find that it has not only lost a good friend, who sold good goods as cheap or cheaper than the mail order houses, but has lost a market for local produce. What incentive is it for a local merchant to keep a sort of repair shop or odds and ends institution, convenient, perhaps, for the catalogue house patron to buy a few small things to fill in, instead of having to wait a week or so for the stuff to come by mail or express? And yet the mail order patron expects the local merchant to furnish him with extras for broken machinery bought in the city and will demand that a grocer deliver a yard of calico, a broom and a sack of salt, and put it on the books. The mail order house does business on a cash basis and it does not deliver its goods.

The mail order patron buys his stuff after looking at a cut executed by a clever draftsman and reading concise descriptions by trained advertising writers. Buying from a picture in a catalogue is a dubious proposition. A cut or even a photograph gives little idea of texture or quality. The only way to tell whether you are getting your money's worth is to see the goods, handle them and talk to the salesman. You have express or freight charges to pay, you take chances on delays and if the goods are not what you expected, it may cost more than the article is worth to effect an exchange.

A good plan is to ask the home merchant for the article you see in the catalogue. If it is worth anything he will get it for you for the same money, less the express bill, and it is worthless he will tell you so and save you trouble and expense. The Progress wonders why any making small town man will even have a passing thought to the purchase of stock in a mail order house.
