"Lese Majeste."

The Progress is informed that Oregon City politicians, drunk with victory over Cascade county, are threatening reprisals because of the remonstrance of taxpayers over conditions at the county seat. Among other things they are reported to have said that the 'secessionists' in this section of the county are to be punished by giving them nothing.

This section of the county wants nothing except what it is entitled to—it hasn't had it in the past—and it proposes to have its rights, if there is law enough on the statute books to get it. Moreover the eyes of the taxpayers are on the expediting of the county books and they will expect to see the expediting started by the county court, finished. The preliminary report of Wm. Whitfield & Co., accountants, is sufficient reason for vigilance on this point. Also it will be observed whether this firm is continued in employment.

It has been a popular belief that officials are the servants of the people who elect them, not the masters. And when any one of them or any number of them, become obsessed with the idea that they can do as they please with the voters, punish them or placate them, according to the viewpoint of the office holders, as to whether they are "good" or not, they are on the road to a rude awakening.

"Lese Majeste" is an offense, peculiar to kings and despots and has no place in a republic or in Clackamas county.

Charlotte Corday, the slayer of Marat, was, according to the best authorities, of noble lineage. Unlike the Maid of Orleans, the most illustrious blood flowed in her veins. She was well educated, and not a whisper was ever heard against her moral character. It does not appear that she ever manifested the slightest signs of insanity or fanaticism. Her action in killing Marat was attended by nothing like madness or hallucination. Taught to believe that the Paris butcher was the one man who hindered the righteous settlement of the strife that was destroying her country, she quietly went down to the great city and in a very unostentatious manner dispatched the man she believed to be her people's greatest enemy.—New York American.
