Industrial Era For Us.

Fifteen million men in the field will use apparel about three times as fast as when peace prevails. The equip-ment of 1,000,000 horses is no small item and means steady equipment of supplies and food for this vast army. Europe can not fight and meet these requirements simultaneously.

The more one of our industries is taxed the greater the activity which will be reflected upon others. It is the history of war that the first shock statement is made by Berlin papers.

Barbed Wire in Warfare.

Russia is in the market to purchase rom us 5000 tons of barbed wire to be used in military operations. The effectiveness of barbed wire entanglements as defense measures has been demonstrated repeatedly since our war with Spain. They were brought into use then with much success and were very effective as a part of the Russian defenses at Port Arthur in the war with Japan. The Russians probably have in mind their experi-ence in the far east and are hoping o make equally good use of the wire hey would purchase in this country. The Russian entanglements before The Russian entanglements before Port Arthur consisted of four parallel lines of three-strand fences about three feet high. The fences were about 10 feet apart and zigzag lines of barbed wire were strung back and forth between the fences. And in addition large quantities of loose coils and pieces of wire were scattered on the ground. The combination was althe ground. The combination was al-most an impassable barrier. It was found that the Japanese could not make progress by cutting the wires. If they got through the first fence they became entangled in the wire on the ground if they were not shot down before reaching the second fence.

The Japanese tried the expedient of fences. That was only a partial success, as many men became helpless in the entanglement of loose wires on the ground. The entanglements fi-nally were disposed of by pulling up the posts and dragging the fences away under cover of darkness, but it was a long and costly task for the attacking force.

The use of wire entanglements is valuable as a defense measure and sians also would prevent the Russians from getting at the Germans. It is effective in delaying and hampering he progress of an enemy and it also protects him against pursuit and a
