Friends Donate Wheel Chair

The many friends of Grandma Jennings of Estacada last week purchased and had delivered to her an invalid's wheeling chair. This convenience was purchased with funds subscribed by many local people, through the solicitation of Mrs. P. M. Wagner and others.

This chair will belong to this community and when Grandma Jennings is through with it, it will be for public use, under the supervision of a committee consisting of Mesdames Underwood, Sparks and Adix.

Grandma Jennings wishes to herewith thank the kind people of this community, for this token of friendship.

Ship Money.

Charles I. was badly in need of money, and his attorney general in the course of his antiquarian researches discovered that in the dim ages of the past the crown had issued writs to the cities and towns on the coast requiring them to provide vessels for the royal needs, and he suggested that this ancient right might be brought into use again. Instead of the actual vessels a money contribution might be exacted instead. Thus the king would be able to tax a larger part of the realm while theoretically observing the laws. Writs for ship money were accordingly issued, but the patriot John Hampden declared that they were illegal and raised such a protest against them that they were practically nullified.

Ballads as Newspapers.

The ballad, or that form of it which is associated with the broadside, was one predecessor of the newspaper as a commentator on events. It was written for the people and sold to the people. Printed on poor paper and passed from hand to hand, copies of early ballads were seldom preserved. Fortunately several men of the seventeenth century began to make collections of ballads, and the copies of broadsides printed before 1700 that are now in existence are supposed to number about 10,000. Soon after 1700 the printed form of the ballad was changed, the "black letter" disappearing, but the ballad continued as a chronicler of happenings and a commentator on political, military and other public events until the middle of the nineteenth century and in the United States as well as England. The "topical" song of today perpetuates the satirical function of the ballad.—Springfield Republican.

Belgian Kongo.

Belgian Kongo, founded thirty years ago, is still in the early stage of development. So far practically no manufacturing industries have yet been established, and, aside from the important copper mines in the Katanga district, the only large industrial enterprises are the railways and river transportation services. It may be said that all business activities in the colony are devoted to the collection of tropical products—rubber, ivory, gum copal, palm oil and kernels, cacao, etc.—and the railway and river services are in reality only accessories to these activities, having been established primarily to aid in the transportation of these products to the seaports. The gathering of rubber in Kongo has never recovered its former activity, and in all probability will never again be so rich a source of income to the colony as it was previous to 1912.

Life without pursuit is a vague and languid thing.—Eaton.

Furniture Company

Makes Assignment

The News is sorry to chronicle the fact that the Estacada Furniture Company, of which W. L. Henthorn has for years been the proprietor, was this week forced to make an assignment to its creditors, with the consequent closing of the store Tuesday.

It is hoped that when the stock is finally disposed of and an adjustment made, that Mr. Henthorn will find himself with a cash surplus, as he deserves far from the fate that has overtaken him, which is largely due to his generosity in extending too liberal a line of credit to his customers.

While Mr. Henthorn will not re-enter mercantile lines in Estacada, he expects to remain here for the summer at least and his friends hope he will remain permanently.

Miss Doris Jensen, who has successfully conducted the Garfield school for the past year, left Tuesday for her home at Dee, Or.

The entertainment given by the Springwater Ladies Aid Society last week was a success both financially and socially.

The machinery in the Estacada Cannery has all been installed and the boiler is being unloaded at the plant today.
