Cannery Refusing Orders

canned vegetables and if a sufficient planting can be contracted for beans, squashes and cabbages, the plant will increase its capacity to handle these lines.

As many growers netted as high as $300 per acre from loganberries and other fruits this year, it is hoped that more growers will agree to plant for future years, with the cannery guaranteeing a good price for the fruit for five to ten years in advance.

With the evergreen berry thriving locally as it does in few other localities, much money was made by harvesters of the wild berries and as is being done in Washington, many growers are contemplating cultivating this abundantly growing fruit.

Another year should see the Estacada Cannery employing at least fifty men and women and paying out for produce in this locality many thousands of dollars.

The cannery is a local institution in every sense, being locally owned and operated, buying local produce and dependent on local support from the farmers for its prosperity and it is hoped that more growers will get in touch with Mgr. Deming and contract to plant produce for next year and future years consumption.

Students Debate Politics

The interest in the past presidential situation was not confined only to the citizens of voting age, but in Estacada was the subject of much study and discussion on the part of the school children.

Several interesting debates were held in the high and grammar schools. A dual debate occurred in the 8th grade prior to election between teams comprising Olive Humphrey, Bertha Devore and Raymond Lovelace on the Democratic side, with the Republican champions, Mocky Sagner, Lyla McKinney and Douglass Drill, winning.

This same 8th grade team of Hughes defenders later defeated a seventh grade Wilson trio, with the three high school girls, Dora Currin, Christina Graham and Grace Allen acting as judges; the losing team comprising Violet Sarver, Olga Eschleman and Elsmere Devore.
