The apportionment of $5,000 to be raised by Estacada and Eastern Clackamas County, for the Red Cross Fund, as compared with a total of $4,000 for the entire county of Hood River, is paying this community a big compliment.

This apportionment by the Red Cross committee must have been based on some of our early boom days' advertising literature, but our orchards, like our literature have never equaled Hood River's as yet.

Still, in proportion to our wealth and profits, Eastern Clackamas has come through with Red Cross and other donations, comparing favorably with other more settled and wealthier communities.

There should be a sign erected in a prominent place in Estacada reading— "It is unlawful to post any form of advertising on telephone or electric light poles, on fences, sides of buildings, etc. without the permission of the City Recorder".

Last week someone came into town with a paste pot and an assortment of Gladstone Chautauqua posters, said posters having been securely plastered on several buildings and our experience has been that those same posters will remain plastered there, until the winter's rains and winds finally strip them off.

Nothing so cheapens a town, as to have it used for a bill board with the advertising, intended for one or two days only, remaining for months and months.

Storage Of Eggs In Water Glass

At a cost of not to exceed two cents a dozen, eggs may be preserved in waterglass from the end of one spring to the beginning of the next in good condition for all domestic uses. The water glass (sodium silicate) should be diluted with eight parts of recently boiled and cooled water, and enough poured into an earthen jar to fill it half full. The clean, fresh eggs on hand should be lowered carefully into the solution, and the jar closed with a close-fitting cover until another batch of eggs is gathered for storage, and so on till the jar is full. Full particulars can be learned by writing to the Oregon Agricultural College, Corvallis, Oregon, for Extension bulletin 190, Preserving Eggs.

Fishermen Attention

Despite the report in the News of last week, to the effect that the Clackamas River is only closed to commercial fishing, many inquiries have come to this office, asking if it was closed to hook and line fishing.

An error appeared in the report sent to the Portland papers from Oregon City, stating the river was closed to all fishing, this same error having appeared in the Oregon City papers also, but State Game Warden, Shoemaker says emphatically— "the Clackamas is closed only to commercial fishing".

Dover Doings

(Contributed)

Mrs. S. A. Updegrave and A. J. Morrison attended the State Grange at Astoria week before last.

John Kreiger purchased a new 4 h. p. gasoline draw saw outfit the other day.

Harry Morrison of Portland is now helping to run his father's farm here.

Many of the local people attended the Red Cross picnic at Firwood Sunday.

Under the direction of Supervisor Udell, work on the grading of the roads in this district is now underway. Owing to their rough condition, six horses were needed to handle the grader and such will remain the condition until a much needed coat of gravel is placed on these highways, which are nearly impassable during the rainy season.
