once the Estacada telephone poles will be robbed of their economical duty of furnishing free advertising space.

The News and its publisher have for some years felt that they were justly entitled to a larger share of the advertising of public matters from the home community, also believing that such advertising was the only real method of obtaining proper publicity.

In the case of the ordinances emanating from the City Council, the law allowed a choice of either hiding them from public gaze on a few telephone poles or publishing in the newspaper, with the former method usually adopted, but in the instance of the annual school meeting the law prescribed the procedure and the publisher modestly and bashfully asserted his rights.
