Chautauqua Was a Great Success

struck the most responsive chord was the pageant by the children, Friday night in which they won the hearts of all.

It was a patriotic allegory telling of conditions before the war and now, in an appealing fairy land style. The Goddess of Love or the fairy godmother, ruling over a land of happy fairies, when the wicked witches enter to bring hatred and jealousy in to the land by their poisoned brew. War is declared by the witches and the people of the enchanted land need help. So the fairy godmother consoles the children by calling upon the Invisible King for a cure for the witches' brew. A chalice is filled with mercy, peace and justice, which brings happiness into the land again. At last Uncle Sam and Liberty arrive to bring peace. The witches having been defeated are found joining with the others in "The Star Spangled Banner."

The committee reenforced by several additional signers, have contracted for a next season's engagement.
