Mail Order Houses and Home Merchants

make a reasonable profit. After all the appeal to support home institutions is a powerful one.

Let the home merchants bear in mind these points and work on them, and we are confident that they will not be disappointed in attaining satisfactory results, for they are derived from human nature.

On the other hand, the customers must remember that the relation between them and the home merchants is far more intimate and mutual than between them and the mail order house. Their dealings with the latter are purely business, but that between them and the former is reciprocal. Each is vitally affected by the other. If without the country there can be no town, without the town the country will be very much at a disadvantage land values will not only be lower, but prices for produce also, not to mention the want of all the conveniences which a modern town supplies, which go far to improve the manner of living and add to its comfort. Even if they pay a little more for goods, this will be more than made up by increased facilities afforded to them by the town, such as churches, high schools, public libraries, places of amusement, telephone and electric and railroad service, etc. If they doubt, let them go and live miles from a town, and see how they will like it. The home merchants it must not be forgotten pay a large share of the taxes and expense for maintaining these benefits, while the mail order house does not contribute one cent.

Kaiser Bill's Old Grey Goose

Kaiser Bill can't quite understand, The hash that's made of all he planned; Nor how it is true beyond dispute, The finish has come to his game of loot.

Little he thought in his wonderful plans, How the bravest and best from all of the clans;

Would cook to a turn his old grey goose, Letting it stew in its own fat juice.

Nor did he reckon that Ferdinand Foch, And General Pershing, he'd thought to josh;

With Douglass Haig would pull his legs, While their boys got away with the golden eggs.

To finish the job, they had a hunch, That Poincaire and George and all that bunch;

Woodrow and doughboys from east to west, Should put in their licks and break up the nest.
