The Cathedral and the Boy

First impressions, we are constantly informed, are the strongest. Experience shows us how hard it often is to overcome erroneous ideas which first impressions have produced. I wonder how long it took for the man to rid himself of his first impression on the restoration of his sight, when he saw "men as trees, walking." Even after he could see clearly without any blur, men and trees would be associated together. Especially is it true that the impressions which the child receives exercise a most lasting effect. Very often they will be dormant for years, but all the time unconsciously affecting him. I know a man whose mind was profoundly influenced for good, by living as a boy under the shadow of an ancient Cathedral.

For miles around, the Cathedral dominated the landscape, as it crowned the summit of a steep hill which rose abruptly from the surrounding level of the lowland. The boy being of an imaginative and meditative temperament, used to gaze in admiration oftentimes mingled with awe, at the venerable and majestic fane. Many an hour would he pass, admiring the wonderful tracery of its pinnacles, arches, windows, and towers. One evening on returning home for the holidays, as the train circled around the base of the hill, he chanced to look up and saw the great Cathedral towering above, keeping watch and ward over the city beneath. The picture has not faded during the ensuing years and it recalls the words of the psalmist: "I will lift up my eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help." "Behold he that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep."

The Cathedral became the boy's familiar friend whom he grew to love. He grieved over the mutilation and desecration it had received during the time of the commonwealth, for Chomwell's soldiers had used it for a stable and a barrack. They had knocked off the heads of its statues, and shivered to atoms much of its beautiful stained glass. But, phoenix-like, it had risen from its degradation. Pious hands had replaced what they could, and gathering up the fragments of glass, made with them a beautiful mosaic for one of the windows.

The interior was as impressive and imposing as the exterior. The boy

SCHOOL NEWS

U. S. Boys' Working Reserve

Mr. Signs has been designated as enrolling officer for the U. S. Boys' Working Reserve, in this section.

Every boy who will be 16 on or before July 1st, 1919, or who is not 21, is requested to enroll even though the boy has regular employment or has made his own arrangements for a position. Credit will be given just as though he were placed by the Reserve.

All boys qualified should enroll whether in school or not.

No boy having a position will be placed in other work without his consent.

No boy will be taken from home to work when needed there and then only by consent of his parents.

To the Enrolling Officers,

U. S. Boy's Working Reserve,
State of Oregon.

The following telegram has just been received from Mr. W. E. Hall, National Director of the U. S. Boy's Working Reserve at Washington, D. C.

"Hoover has called people of United States to increased effort to meet appalling situation of peoples of Europe, millions of whom are in peril of imminent starvation. Twenty millions of tons of food is the burden laid upon us. There never was so great a need of the U. S. Boy's Working Reserve. We must continue to make deep drafts upon the patriotism of our High School boys and to summon their energies and those of our Directors to save Europe from famine which is the mother of anarchy."

Yours very truly,

J. W. Brewer,

Federal State Director

Prof. H. P. Barrows and O. L. Straughan of O. A. C. were in the city Friday in the interest of agricultural work that is about to be established under the Smith-Hughes Act. This work will be started in a very short time in order to make as much as possible of the approaching agricultural season.

A recent election of Websterian officers makes Ruth Saling, Pres.; Albert Lins, Vice Pres. and Esther Anderson, Secretary.
