Entertains

Mesdames E. E. Saling and E. W. Bartlett entertained the Tennis club and a few invited friends last Saturday night at the Estacada hotel, the home of the former. The spacious room in which the guests assembled, presented a most charming appearance, with the bright fire in the large fireplace and numerous cut flowers and potted plants which adorned the room in profusion. Each guest was supposed to have a hobby which was acted out, some of which proved unique in the extreme. Guessing contests in which prizes were given, caused some deep thinking and amusement, but the main feature of entertainment was progressive anagrams. There were five tables and this unusual way of entertainment was exceedingly amusing. At the midnight hour the tables were artistically spread and a delightful repast served consisting of hot tamales and other delicious viands. Music and dancing concluded the evening's pleasures and all declared that the hostesses were delightful entertainers.

A well known Portland department store advertised in Sunday's paper a five pound can of the Golden West coffee for $2.55. In last week's NEWS the East Clackamas Supply Co. advertised the same coffee in the same sized can for $2.50, being five cents cheaper. Moral: Look up your home prices before buying elsewhere.

No Spare Time.

"He bought a motorboat to occupy his spare time."

"Now?"

"Now he's so busy trying to get the thing in shape to run that he never has any spare time to go riding in it."

Doctrines.

"Do you believe in the doctrine of metempsychosis?"

"I refuse to be diverted," replied Senator Sorghum. "One doctrine at a time is enough and just now I'm engaged in sticking up for the Monroe doctrine."

THE LORELEI AND THE YANKEE

She sat on a crag in the glamping,
And sang to the soldier below,
The birds to the forest were homing,
And the clouds held a warm afterglow,
The Rhine flowed majestic, eternal,
To the arms of the sea in its flight,
And vine clad the hills in their vernal
Green dress were all hushed for the night.

"O linger, and leave not forever,
Fair youth with the clear steady eyes!
So long have I sat by the river
And waited, thy coming with sighs,
Come, rest in my arms and remember
Naught, naught but our moments of bliss!
And the snows and ice of December
Will dissolve in the fire of our bliss."

He harked to the Lorelei's wailing,
But smiled, quite unmoved by her plea—
"Say, what do you think you are doing,"
He said, "spouting German to me?
I don't like your looks or your manner,
While as for the Rhine, it lacks style,
And the girls of the Star Spangled Banner
Have your kind skinned by a mile."
