WHERE TO BUILD CAMPFIRES.

Nearly all forest and brush fires are caused by the carelessness of the very persons who are most anxious to see forests preserved. Care with matches and smoking materials while in the woods is essential. Camp fires must be built only on a rock or mineral soil from which all inflammable material has been removed and must be kept small. When they have served their purpose they must be thoroughly and completely extinguished.

Only through the exercise of the greatest possible care with fire in the woods at all times can we preserve our forests, and thus safeguard the future of our wood using industries, protect the watersheds of our streams and maintain uninjured the playground of our people.
