ABUSE OF PLEASURE

A controversy is raging in Portland over the use of school buildings for community dances. Those protesting against such use, and desire to have it stopped, cite instances of the demoralizing effects of dancing. Those in favor of the use of the buildings for this purpose point to the fact that dances in school buildings were allowed on condition that there should be proper supervision. They acknowledge that without such supervision there is danger. From the evidence so far submitted it seems that the trouble lies not during the dances in the school buildings, but on the outside. That girls would go from the school dance to oiners in public halls; that they frequently would come with one boy and go home with another. The protesters outlaw all dancing as being in itself immoral.

Here is really the crux of the whole question. Is this true? For our part we do not think so. The instinct to dance is inherent in human nature. The little child spontaneously will dance to inviting music. Dancing is the poetry of motion, and expressive of joy. But like other physical instincts can be, and is woefully abused and misused. This is true of all pleasures, and the more fascinating they are, the more easily they are misused. The dulllest of pastimes are those only which afford no temptation.

In respect to dancing, the danger comes from physical contacts. But anything which involves physical contact is fraught with danger if not rigidly guarded against. In a stricter age no girl was allowed to go out with a boy alone after dark, and even in daytime the privilege was sparingly granted, and only when the boy was well known as of good character and morals. But now-a-days parents let their daughters roam the streets at all hours of the evening and night, with whom they please, and also let them be gone all day without any inquiries as to where they are going and with whom? If parents and guardians did their duty; there would be no trouble. They have the right to forbid their children dancing if they do not wish them to. But those who are willing that their children dance, should only allow them to go under proper chaperonage, especially in going and returning home afterwards. As the use of school buildings in community centers was allowed in order that dances might be better supervised, and thus keep the boys and girls out of the public dance halls, to stop their use will not help matters at all. And as regards chaperonage, it applies to any sort of a gathering which breaks up late at night, whether it be a dance or a revival meeting.

THE LATE POPE

Death is no respecter of persons, and Sunday morning at 6 o'clock he called away the highest placed ecclesiastic in the world, Benedict XV. The late pope's pontificate, while comparatively brief, was passed in an exceptionally stormy period. Beginning a few weeks after the outbreak of the world war, it ended before peace conditions had been fully restored. It is too soon now to pass judgment on his policy, especially during

Indian Chief Thrills With Romance and Legend of Great but Vanishing Yakimas

Chief Strongheart, Noted Indian Actor-Lecturer, to Appear Here Soon in Fascinating Lecture—Friend of Late Colonel Roosevelt.

A chief of the Yakima tribes is scheduled to appear here soon, to interpret the life and soul of a great but vanishing race. He is Chief Strongheart, who was the first full-blooded Indian to offer his services to the late Colonel Roosevelt for his proposed rough riders in 1917. Chief Strongheart served for ten months on the Mexican border doing scout work. Later on he helped in the Liberty Loan Campaign as an effective speaker. He is a well known Indian actor and has taken prominent parts in such plays as "The Flaming Arrow" and the "Heart of Wo-Po-Na." Chief Strongheart is a grand son of Chief Standing Rock, famous Yakima Indian leader. In his lecture "From Peace Pipe to War Trail—and Back Again" he speaks and acts the very life and soul of his people in such a way as best reveals their nobility, patience, inherent goodness, romance, traditions, faith and suffering.

the war, for all is not known. But whether he rose to the opportunity or not, the strain evidently sapped the strength of one naturally of frail physique, and shortened his life. Personally he seems to have been a man of much personal piety and kindness of disposition, a student and scholar. Probably to such an one the laying down of the burdens of the papacy was not unwelcomed, especially as they were not sought for or desired by him. The responsibility was thrust upon him and he did his best to fulfil it, and no man can do more.

VISCOUNT BRYCE

Another distinguished foreigner died last Sunday, Viscount James Bryce, who a few years ago was British ambassador at Washington. But the interest of Americans in him lay in his intimate knowledge of them, as shown in his book, "History of the American Commonwealth," which has been a standard textbook in the schools of the U. S. for a generation, and only last year he brought out a two volume work on "Democracy," which is a comparative study of America as well as an analysis of its press, its party politics and the history of its popular institutions. He was in his 84th year at the time of his death, which will be much regretted on this side of the Atlantic.

FARMERS' PROBLEMS

We are publishing this week the first chapter of an important article of great interest to farmers and also business men generally, on "Some Aspects of the Farmers' Problems."

This article was written at the request of the editor of the Atlantic Monthly, who had been importuned by a great many of his readers to give an unbiased and unprejudiced viewpoint of the so-called agricultural movement. It came as a result of a great many protests to the editor from agricultural interests against an article entitled "The Menace of Special Privileges," which also appeared in the Atlantic Monthly. The editor selected Mr. Baruch because of his independent viewpoint and because of the previous studies he had made on this question at the request of the Kansas State Board of Agriculture and the American Farm Bureau Federation.

Southern California has been in the grip of a cold snap, and the damage done to the fruit and vegetables is estimated at a large sum. Fur coats brought by former residents in the east, and fur caps were resurrected by those fortunate enough to possess them.

A Good Investment

The Portland Railway, Light & Power Co. is now offering an especially attractive stock issue to local investors in a preferred stock issue, bearing seven per cent interest payable quarterly. Application to the company at Portland will bring out full information.

The seven per cent prior preference stock of the Portland Railway, Light & Power Company is fully paid up and non-assessable. It is preferred both as to assets and earnings, over the $22,500,000 first preferred, second preferred and common stock heretofore issued by the company. It is free from the normal Federal income tax and from all state taxes while held by residents of the state of Oregon. Dividends must be paid on this issue of stock before any dividends can be declared on any of the other classes of stock outstanding.

The proceeds from the sale of this issue of prior preferred stock in 1922 will be used on the following improvements and extensions now included in our 1922 budget of improvements.

In the railway division it is contemplated that about $250,000 in betterments will be added to the track and roadway property in connection with reconstruction work in various parts of the system during the season of 1922.

The development of the Oak Grove hydro-electric project is the outstanding improvement contemplated. Road construction to the power house site is well under way and will be completed this year. The initial development of 27,000 horsepower is scheduled for completion by the summer of 1924. The ultimate development, 80,000 horsepower, contemplates two storage reservoirs, one of 40,000 acre feet capacity and the other 52,000 acre feet. In addition to increasing the capacity of the new plant, these reservoirs will provide seasonal storage for two of the company's present plants, thereby materially increasing their annual output capacity.

Persons desiring to plant potatoes in February for early use should use whole seed, as cut seed rots in a cold, wet soil. Little is usually gained, however, by extremely early planting.

In Confidence

The relationship of a Bank to its customers is necessarily one of confidence. It is essential that the bank should understand its customers financial condition in order to extend to them the best service possible. It is equally essential that such information should be held in the strictest confidence. We ask our customers to consult us freely about their financial plans and problems. This is merely one feature of our up to date banking service which we are extending to the people of this community.
