THE ROAD TO GLORY

The highest is always on the summit of the hill difficult, whose slopes are arduous and steep, and calls for greatest endurance on the part of those who would make the ascent. Thus, they whose paths have been made too smooth for them in early life seldom win distinction of any merit. The great characters of history were never slackers when it came to work, and they fully earned the laurels they subsequently won.

The great American whose birthday is commemorated on Sunday, is an inspiring illustration of one who reached the pinnacle of fame, over an exceptionally rough and toilsome road. But the height was commensurate with the strenuousness of the climb. The road which ran between the log cabin and the White House, was neither paved, macadamized or even graded. And only one who was inured to the severest exertions could have traveled it. But looking back now, who will deny that the goal proved well worth the work. Finis coronavit opus.

Lincoln's life experience furnishes a much needed lesson for today, as there is a general complaint of lack of leaders, and the reason is not far to seek. For a number of years the growing generations have not been trained so as to produce leaders. Our fathers used to sing with vigor if not always in key, a verse of an old hymn which reads:

"Must I be carried to the skies,
On flowery banks of ease,
While others fought to win the prize,
Or sailed through bloody seas."

The youths of the land for the past twenty or more years have not been trained to endure hardness. Their paths have been made too smooth for them. Educational advantages have been flung in their faces, educational difficulties have been surmounted for them instead of their being trained to surmount them for themselves. Sports and pastimes have usurped the place of study in educational institutions. While in the work-a-day world there has been a determined effort to shorten hours of work and increase wages, so that the pursuit of pleasure may be more freely followed. What has been the result? A flabbiness of physical, intellectual and moral fibers. We do not produce Lincoln's because we do not fit the young to develop after the manner of a Lincoln.

The training of Abraham Lincoln began in the home, where he first learned how to endure hardness. If our great-grandparents erred on the point of severity the parents of the present generation of children err in the opposite direction, and with baneful effect not only on the children, but the national welfare.

Lincoln's birthday is rightly honored, but its commemoration will have scant educational value unless the children are taught that his imperishable fame was won only through hardship and unremitting toil; that the same path is open to them so to attain, if they will only follow in his steps.

Our thanks are due the Portland Telegram for a pamphlet containing a number of articles and editorials on "The Water Power and the Oregon Country," which originally appeared in that paper. The whole forms a valuable work of reference.

THE ARMS PARLEY

The Washington conference on the whole may be considered a success, and will give prestige to President Harding who called it, and Secretary Hughes who so ably guided and directed its deliberations. It yet remains to be seen how the agreements will be lived up to. In such matters "there is many a slip 'twixt cup and lip," and Japan, for instance, may take her time about fulfilling her promises to China and Siberia. It is doubtful whether the treaty outlawing poison gas in war, and making it an act of piracy for a submarine to attack and sink a merchant ship, will prove more than a scrap of paper in actual warfare. But whatever may be the shortcomings of the signatory powers in carrying out their promises, the conference will stand out in history as a most notable one. President Harding in his valedictory address well expressed its chief accomplishment in the great example it has set:

"Not all the world is yet tranquilized. But here is the example to imbue with new hope all who dwell in apprehension. At this table came understanding, and understanding brands armed conflict as abominable in the eyes of enlightened civilization."

"I once believed in armed preparedness. I advocated it. But I have come now to believe there is better preparedness in a public mind and a world opinion made ready to grant justice precisely as it exacts it. And justice is better served in conferences of peace than in conflicts at arms."

PIUS XI

"The pope is dead, long live the pope." Benedict XV having been gathered to his fathers and his predecessors, a successor has been elected in the person of Cardinal Ratti, the archbishop of Milan. Physically he is in direct contrast to Benedict, being a large and robust man. He is credited with liberal tendencies and is likely to continue the policy of reconciliation with the Italian government which Benedict inaugurated. In may be recalled that his predecessor, Pius IX, was credited with liberal leanings at his election, but proved to be one of the most reactionary of popes. Theoretically the pope is absolute, but in reality, he is circumscribed by tradition and his environment. Cardinal O'Connell of Boston arrived just too late to participate in the election, which no doubt was a great disappointment to him and also the members of his faith whom he represents. But if he had been present the result would probably not have been different.

One sign of improved taste is apparent at this time of the year, namely, the disappearance of penny, awful, comic valentines.

"On to Genoa!" should be the slogan.

Mr. R. C. Deming,
Estacada, Oregon.

Dear Mr. Deming:
When I saw you the other day and told you about Erivan and told you how I had picked twenty children off the streets and left ten times that many to die, and also since that time how we had opened the great soup-kitchen, but were still unable to care for all the needy ones, I thought I had a pretty good vision of the desperate situation in Erivan.

Saturday night Dr. Lovejoy telephoned me a message she had just received from Dr. Elliott, who is in charge of our hospital there. Because I can see the streets of Erivan as clearly as I can see the streets of Estacada, it comes, of course, with tremendous force. After it has come home to you as it has to me, then I want you to lay it on the hearts of others as I am putting it on you.

The Story of Our States

By JONATHAN BRACE
XXII.—ALABAMA

THE discovery of Alabama is credited to De Soto in 1540. The English also laid claim to this territory and included it in the grant to North Carolina. But it was the French who first settled here erecting in 1702 Fort St. Louis on Mobile Bay and founding the town of Mobile nine years later. Mobile was for many years the capital of Louisiana. France in 1763 ceded the territory east of the Mississippi to England and the northern part of the present State of Alabama was joined to the Illinois territory. The southern portion was known as West Florida. Serious conflict with the Indians was kept up for many years. In fact, even as late as 1812, there was an uprising of the Creeks which resulted in terrible atrocities and massacres.

During the Revolution West Florida remained loyal to England, but was seized by Spain only to be turned over to the United States in 1813. This Mobile section was then added to the northern district and the State of Alabama was formed and became the twenty-second state of the Union in 1819.

The meaning of the name Alabama is variously interpreted. It was the name of an Indian tribe which inhabited this territory at the time of De Soto's first visit. After this tribe the river was named and the state was called Alabama after the river. The Indian word was supposed to mean "Here we rest," and these words are used on the state's coat of arms, but this interpretation is doubtful and its real meaning is uncertain. Alabama is sometimes called the Plantation State. Its area is 61,908 square miles.

misery here in spite of the enormous work of the Near East Relief. We have 852 cases in the hospital. The children are dying in all corners of the city.

"Sunday afternoon we went for a horse-back ride. We saw a horse that had died of starvation. Three wretched human beings were tearing the flesh with their hands and eating it. It was a most repulsive sight.

"All day long we can hear the wails and groans of little children outside our office building in hope we can and will pick them up. If the sun shines a little while they quiet down. When it rains they begin again. One day the rain turned to snow and it was awful to listen to them. The note of terror that came into the general wail was plainly perceptible upstairs, and I had the windows closed. They well knew what a night out in the snow meant to them. We are picking them up as fast as possible, but it would be fatal to crowd them to such a point where we would lose even those we already have in the orphanage."

May this spur you to renewed efforts as it has all of us here in the office.

Cordially yours,
J. J. Handsaker,
State Director.
