AN HONORED HERO

Today is the centenary of the birth of Ulysses S. Grant, whose name will ever be honored by his countrymen for the service he rendered the nation at a critical period of its history. Other generals may have been more brilliant, but events showed that it was his doggedness and determination that turned the balance and won the day. One who fought both under McClellan and Grant, remarked to the writer, that when the former was in command there were continual delays, and everything hung fire, but when Grant took charge it was "get there from the word go." But while his achievements in war were remarkable, he never did anything finer than when making peace after the surrender of Lee. He manifested true greatness of spirit, in making the terms as easy for the vanquished as possible, and taking into consideration their future welfare by letting them retain their horses, so they could return and work their farms. He sought no self glorification and did not demand a Roman triumph, or a spectacular surrender of the southern army, but simply said, "Let us have peace," and showed that he meant every word. His personal simplicity was another characteristic which commended him, and which he retained when later he was called to the presidency. Of him, as of another great general, it may be said without flattery,

"His life was gentle, and the elements So mixed in him, that nature might stand up And say to all the world, This was a man!"

THE RELIGIOUS GIBRALTAR

A noted English statesman and scholar wrote an article some years ago, which attracted a good deal of attention, entitled "The Impregnable Rock of Holy Scripture." The title was exceedingly apt, as no book has been so vigorously assailed and assaulted, and has emerged from the conflict so unscathed and unaffected as the Bible. Every time its veracity and reliability have been questioned, and for the time being shaken, in the end it has been sustained and vindicated. Any other book so attacked would long ago have been sunk into oblivion. As someone has well remarked, the Bible is an anvil on which innumerable hammers have been worn out.

And yet the assertion is often made that it is out of date, and that no educated person believes in it. That is an airy generalization which is easily refuted, for on every hand can be found men of scholarship who are not ashamed to express their belief and trust in it. The above statement is usually made by one who has not straightened out his thinking, and when questioned as to the reason why he does not believe, it will be seen that what he does not believe, is a particular theory or interpretation of the scriptures. Theories and interpretations do not constitute the Bible, and it is quite possible to reject any number of theories and interpretations, and yet hold firmly to a belief in the Bible. For theories and interpretations change as knowledge increases, and what one generation holds, a succeeding one rejects, but yet the Bible remains. So there is no cause for alarm when its credibility is denied. For on examination, the charge that it is untrue, proves to be what the soldiers in the late war called a "dud," that is, a shell which came with a great deal of noise and fell with a heavy thud, but did not do any particular damage, because it failed to explode.

A PORTENT

The Rapallo treaty made between Germany and Russia, at the Genoa conference was portentous, and it is no wonder that the allies were startled. And although nominally it has been declared void by the latter, its shadow will remain as that of a coming event. For the time being both Germany and Russia must bow to the will of the allies, but they will wait their time no doubt. The combination is most ominous, for Russia has immense supplies of raw materials which Germany requires, and with which, with her industry she will make good use to rehabilitate herself, first commercially and financially and then militarily. Subconsciously she is still thinking and planning for another day, when she hopes to turn the tables, and win back what she has lost, with the heaviest compound interest. Certainly the future is loaded with T. N. T. and if our country is to be safe, it must substitute statesmen for politicians, in the conduct of national affairs.

Movie producers may propose, but Will Hays disposes, and by the edict of the latter Fatty Arbuckle's occupation is gone.

Leave a clean camp and a dead fire.
