AFTERMATH OF THE ELECTION

In spite of the upheaval and excitement caused by the election returns, matters quieted down very rapidly. Both Olcott and McArthur sent graceful congratulations to their successful opponents, and received in return as graceful replies. The papers have been busy analyzing the situation and searching for reasons to explain it. Nearly all of these are in substantial agreement. One of the best was by the Corvallis Gazette-Times which we reproduce below:

There will always be a difference of opinion as to the relative placing of the factors entering into the success or failure at the polls. However, the Gazette-Times dares to venture certain conclusions in reference to the result at the late election.

First in the success of Mr. Pierce comes his own engaging personality and splendid campaigning ability. Without a man of his type and fighting capacity it would not have been possible for the result to have been accomplished.

Second, the issue on which Mr. Pierce chose to make his campaign—the lessening of taxation. Taxes touch everybody, and all the natives sit up and take notice when there is possible but not probable, relief.

Third, the defection from republican ranks due to the Compulsory school bill and the breaking away resulting from the activities of the Klan fight in the primaries and the splendid organization work of this body.

Fourth, the fact that Mr. Olcott, his opponent, has never been regarded as a republican organization man of sufficient certainty as to bring him the enthusiastic support of the leading workers in the republican organization.

Fifth, a resentment in the minds of many at the presentation of the record of Mr. Pierce with the imputations attached.

Sixth, the general discontent throughout the country born of a combination of circumstances, and in many instances without reason, except that periodically there is a disposition to swat the fellow in office.

Seventh, a feeling on the part of many that Mr. Olcott has been in state office quite a while.

Doubtless there were many other factors contributing to the success of Mr. Pierce, but inquiry before and after leads the Gazette-Times to put the leading ones in the order stated. It will be the disposition of many to arrange these in order of importance on the bases of their own feelings. In case one was moved by a certain factor more than another, in all probability the disposition will be to magnify that as a factor contributing most to the attitude of others—Corvallis Gazette-Times

SELF SUPPORT IN COLLEGE

The Portland Telegram in an editorial last Saturday, gave two instances of men who in later life attained eminence in their respective spheres, and who had to work their way through college. One was the late Bishop Fallows of the Reformed Episcopal church in Chicago, and the other a successful lawyer in Milwaukee, Wisconsin. Both, though separated by a number of years, were alumni of the State University of Wisconsin. The former boarded himself during college, hiring a room in the dormitory for $4.00 a term. His parents lived on a farm twelve miles away, and his father hauled in his wood for him. Young Fallows walked the twelve miles every Saturday and each Monday walked back with his week's supply of food packed in a knapsack on his back. He graduated in 1859 and became an officer in the Civil war, and one of the sanest, most virile and inspiring men in America. The other did chores for a member of the faculty for his board. In those days the majority of students had to work their way and consequently they valued their education, and made the most of it. Now-a-days, at many colleges those so doing are looked down upon, and most students are financed by their parents. The latest investigations show that the really earnest students are in the minority. It may be questioned then whether the cheapening of higher education is really an advantage. Those who show they are in earnest and in need of financial aid should be helped to the utmost by judicious loans, but those who merely go to college for its social advantages or to have a good time should be discouraged by having to pay considerably for it.

THE SMALL COLLEGE

We have always been interested in the small college, as it performs a service which the larger university, owing to its numbers, cannot render. This is, giving individual attention to the students. At the universities with classes of a thousand or more members, the individual is lost in the mass. The professors do not know their pupils by name, and often not even by sight. This is a decided drawback as often a man's course will be entirely spoiled for the want of a little advice and guidance, which if the professor knew him he would furnish. Oregon has a number of small colleges of denominational origin, which are doing excellent work in spite of being handicapped by lack of funds. Among these is the Pacific University at Forest Grove, which was founded in 1849, under Congregational supervision, and has turned out some noted graduates, prominent among whom was the late Harvey Scott, the former brilliant editor of the Oregonian. This institution has been having a hard time of it, financially, and we are glad to learn that it was taken under the patronage of the Congregational Foundation for education, last spring, and now the Congregationalists of the state will give it their backing. This is about as important a work as any which this body can undertake. Better let go their smaller missions than to have this institution close its doors. We hope also it will keep its distinctive denominational character. If it gives up this for the sake of the loaves and fishes offered by the Carnegie Foundation, it will be as the salt which has lost its savor.

Governor Olcott has issued his Thanksgiving proclamation, and urges that all strife be forgotten and that the day may be one of peace and forgiveness. Senator Hall of Marshfield please take notice.

Recordership Settled

The tie between J. K. Ely and Fred Bartholomew for recorder, was broken at the city council meeting last Tuesday night, according to the directions of the district attorney by drawing lots. Tom Morton was chosen to do the drawing, and the name drawn was J. K. Ely. To those who have conscientious scruples about such methods, we cite scriptural precedent. When the first vacancy was filled in the college of the apostles, we are told: "They gave forth their lots, and the lot fell upon Matthias."

The Story of Our States

By JONATHAN BRACE
XLVI.—NEW MEXICO

AS ITS name implies, New Mexico's history is closely allied with Old Mexico. It was the Spanish who were its first explorers, De Vaca visiting this region in 1538 and Coronado four years later. The natives were the Pueblo Indians, although they are sometimes erroneously reputed to have been Aztecs as they were well advanced in the arts and had a comparatively high civilization. These Indians were conquered in 1598 by Juan de Onate and became subject to Spanish rule, being forced to work the mines and pay tribute. Missions were established and Santa Fe was founded about 1605.

Except for a period of ten years when the Indians revolted and maintained their independence, New Mexico remained under Spanish control until in 1821 Mexico gained its independence from Spain and New Mexico became a province of Mexico. Thus it remained until the outbreak of the Mexican war, when in 1846 Colonel Kearny marched from Fort Leavenworth with his troops, occupied Santa Fe and declared this region a part of the United States. By the Treaty with Mexico in 1848, the upper part of the state was formally ceded to the United States and the Territory of Mexico was organized in 1851, which reached from Texas to California.

Arizona was set off from New Mexico in 1863 and a few years later a portion was contributed to Colorado. Application for admission as a state started in 1850, but it was not until 1910 that New Mexico became the forty-seventh state.

New Mexico ranks fourth in size among the states with an area of 122,634 square miles, but is sparsely populated and accordingly has only three electoral votes for President.
