FOREST PROTECTION WEEK AND ARBOR DAY

A PROCLAMATION

Whereas, it is essential to the continued comfort, welfare, and prosperity of the people of the United States that abundant forests, widely distributed and maintained in a condition of high productiveness, be forever wisely conserved as one of our greatest natural resources; and

Whereas, because of our constantly increasing need for wood and other forest products, together with our past failure to provide for reforestation, we are drawing upon our supplies of timber four times as fast as they are renewed through growth; and

Whereas, the most formidable agency of forest destruction and prevention of reforestation is fire and, of the fires which annually devastate vast areas, four-fifths are ascribed in origin to human agencies and virtually all may be controlled and made innocuous through prudence, care and vigilance;

Therefore, I, CALVIN COOLIDGE, President of the United States, do urge upon the Governors of the various States to designate and set apart the week of April 21-27, 1924, as Forest Protection Week, and wherever practicable, and not in conflict with State law or accepted customs, to celebrate Arbor Day within that week. I also urge all citizens, either in association or as individuals, all schools and the press of the land to give common thought to the protection of our forests from fire, to the end that, in the future as in the past, these forests may supply us with wood, protect the purity of our streams, and otherwise serve the people of the United States.

CALVIN COOLIDGE

By the President:
CHARLES E. HUGHES,
Secretary of State.

WHAT IS FOREST PROTECTION WEEK

Thoughtful people have realized for sometime that before very much could be done to reduce the enormous destruction which our forests suffer annually from fire, it would be necessary to educate the people as a whole to just what this destruction means to them as private citizens. Forest Protection Week was inaugurated in 1920 in Washington and Oregon, a week being set aside during which every effort was made to inform the people as to the seriousness of the fire menace to the great forests of that region. It is hard to estimate the direct result of that first year's effort, but it was of tremendous value because it served as the beginning as Forest Protection Week as now nationally observed.

In 1921 President Harding realizing the importance of having the entire nation join in the observance of such a week and accordingly issued his first proclamation on the subject. In 1922 Forest Protection Week and the fiftieth anniversary of Arbor Day were combined in a highly successful observance, and last year observance was more widespread than ever.

Thus we see how in four short years the idea has grown into a national institution. That the work yet to be done is enormous is best shown by the sad fact that fire in the woods continues to exact a frightful toll. Like a gate keeper at the bridgehead, it yearly reaps its red harvest. Last year 11½ million acres in continental United States were fire-swept with a flame damage of almost $17,000,000.

The toll taken by forest fires must be blazoned throughout the country in the hope that it will arouse the nation to greater effort. The time has come for the nation to awaken to its staggering fire losses and to put its heel on fire in the woods. Fire and forests do not mix. We cannot have both. We must choose between them, and choose quickly.

And so again this year our president has proclaimed this week as Forest Protection week. Throughout the length and breadth of our fair land schools, churches, women's clubs, civic organizations, and that greater moulder of public thought—the American press—are uniting in the greatest effort yet put forth to the end that fire may be driven from our forest.

Mr. Deen has gone to Oregon City where he is building a house. He will move his family there in about a month. Mr. La Forge and his wife are living at the Estacada hotel.

Jay Seeds, formerly of Portland, died Sunday, April 6, at his home in Klamath Falls, after a short illness. He is survived by his wife and one child. Mrs. Seeds is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Kitching of Estacada, and a sister of Mrs. H. W. Beal of Independence, and Mrs. Andrew Shankland, of Sellwood. —Sellwood Bee.
