Too Much Politics

According to a well known English man of affairs, the great hindrance to the more rapid recovery of the world's stability of trade and commerce is that all nations are suffering from a surplus of politics and a shortage of business and production.

There is today a world tendency to rely more and more on governments grants and doles, which do not really stimulate, but rather hinder and delay recovery. The world seems to have forgotten that all governments are really only paupers living on the activities of the citizens; that for governments the only source of income is taxation, and that taxation impoverishes all and can enrich only a small class; that the prosperity of any people can only be won by work, and that capital is the great industrial instrument with which to win prosperity.—Ex.

"BEST IN THE LONG RUN"

Farm Life Training

Better satisfaction in Oregon farm life as well as better profits are aimed at in the work of the girls and boys at the junior summer session of the state college this year.

Radio, farm mechanics and blacksmithing are new courses for boys. Judging canned products, home decoration, community entertainment, short cuts in housework and child care are among the new courses for girls.

"Five hundred club members are expected this year," says J. L. Allen, assistant state club leader. "Club leaders and others interested in the work have announced their intention of coming."

All class work and instruction will be in the mornings, leaving the afternoons for demonstrations in handling live stock, mowing field crops, and growing garden vegetables and fruits.
