WILL RISE AGAIN

The people of the Northwest were dismayed Wednesday afternoon, July 23, when they heard of the disaster which had overtaken the great Pacific International Live Stock Exposition. Its magnificent building in North Portland, Oregon, caught fire from a burning shingle mill, and in a half hour was reduced to ashes.

This splendid plant, the largest and most conveniently arranged and equipped structure of its kind in the world, covered over ten acres of land. It cost approximately $500,000. However, it was insured for about $350,000, and General Manager O. M. Plummer states positively that the Exposition will be held November 1 to 8, inclusive, without fail, and that already assurances are coming from every quarter of the compass of aid and entries of livestock. He says: "The Exposition will be bigger and better than ever. Naturally, all our plans have not been completed, but we expect to rebuild and work will be commenced at once. The Pacific International Live Stock Exposition is so solidly founded and so important an institution that even a great blow such as this cannot halt its growth and progress."

The new building which will take the place of the one just destroyed, will follow the same plan, so admirable did that plan prove to be. The amphitheatre probably will be made somewhat larger, but the general construction will be the same as before. It seems that it cannot be bettered.

Prune Growers to Organize
A meeting of all prune growers in this district has been called for Saturday afternoon of this week, August 2nd, to consider plans for handling this year's crop. The meeting is called for 2 o'clock at the cannery.

A. W. Botkin, local member of the Board of Directors of the Oregon Growers' Cooperative Association took the initiative in calling this meeting, to bring matters to a head. The Association's decision not to handle fruit this fall precipitates this move on the part of the local prune men. Mr. Botkin has a number of propositions to make including a sale of a block of prunes to a reliable cannery and another proposition with a green prune shipping concern for the eastern market. The principal business will revolve around discussion of plans for affiliating with the newly organized North Pacific Prune Exchange, which will handle the dried prunes of various locals including Dundee, Dallas, Salem, Yamhill and Forest Grove.

All received a souvenir of the occasion. The store showed off remarkably well as did also the display of goods. A demonstrator was present to exemplify the use of the Richards line of brushes. A number of bouquets adorned the counters, which had been sent Miss Sturgeon for the occasion by friends. Fool's Highway

Mamie Ross, little clothes mender in the tailor shop of Old Levi, is loved by Mike Kildare, pugilist and ward-heeler of the Bowery. She repulses his advances, horrified by his business, but still fascinated by the man's brute strength and animal attraction. He lures her on but finally the girl's innocence shames him. Then he discovers that his love for her is a true and holy thing. He forsakes his old gang as a consequence. They lay a trap for him, and he is horribly beaten in an underground den. Then follows one of the strangest, most gripping denouements ever screened. The story is rich in the romance of the old Bowery; its quaint characters are intensely human, and is tense in interest from opening to fadeout.

Good Berry Yield

J. W. Shafford returned to Portland Monday afternoon after having picked and marketed his loganberry crop on his patch east of town. It comprises three and a half acres, and from it 11½ tons were shipped to a canning factory at The Dalles. If the weather had not been so dry, a still larger yield would have resulted.

It is to be hoped that in the future the local cannery will be able to handle all such crops. This place has the reputation of producing the finest loganberries, not only in the state but elsewhere. This should be a distinct asset which ought to hold the demand and market. Last year most of the crop was dried and there was little call for it. But recently shipments have begun to be made to Montana and Canada, with the prospect that all the crop which had been held over will be sold.

Will Celebrate

Arrangements for the celebration here Labor Day, are progressing finely. The barbecue is assured and undoubtedly a street carnival will be another attraction, either in the park or on the main thoroughfare. Be sure to plan to come to Estacada on Labor Day where a good time is assured. The celebration is to be under the auspices of the Eastern Clackamas Band and the Library Association, both worthy of generous support.

INSPIRING RALLY AT S. S. CONVENTION

On Sunday, July 27th, there was held by the Council of Religious Education for the Eastern District of Clackamas county, a very successful and profitable convention in the grove of the Eagle Creek grange. The place was ideal for an open air meeting, with a neat platform for the speakers, singers and officers of the council. The president, Edward Shearer of Springwater, and the vice-president, M. C. Glover of Eagle Creek, were everywhere in evidence.

The Song Service was conducted by James Shearer of Portland and was well done. There was a regular Bible School session in which the Temptation of Christ was presented by various teachers.

One of the outstanding addresses was made by Miss Andrews, a Child's Welfare Worker of Portland. It was doubtless a revelation to many present, the amount and character of the work being done by such workers, but the need of such work in all of the small rural communities is much greater.

Rev. R. D. Everett of Portland called attention to the literature he had brought in samples to the grounds, to aid those interested in the religious education of the young. He then gave an address on the Teacher Before His Class. This was thoroughly practical and suggestive of the needs of many who teach in the Bible Schools and the way to meet these.

Following this a splendid basket dinner was enjoyed by all. The greatest abundance had been provided by those house wives who look to reaching the hearts of men and children thru their stomachs. If any one left the grounds hungry it was clearly a case of the fault of the hungry. The food was there of fine quality and in profusion, and the invitations to eat were many and gracious.

Doctor W. T. Milliken of Portland, whose work is among the boys in Baptist ranks, gave the convention an inspiring address. He called attention to the necessity of giving the boys of the land a thorough grounding in the religion of the Bible to enable them to meet the trying period of their lives when temptations of all kinds will beset them on every side.

Mrs. Jean M. Johnson, state secretary, gave the convention a brief, but illuminating statement of the progress that had been made in the Bible School work since its beginning. She stated, and made every one feel that the work belonged to all of the people.

Another feature of the convention that was appreciated by the gathering was the Estacada band. At the beginning and at different times, they refreshed and enlivened all present with their best efforts. The men and boys making up this organization merit the encouragement and praise of our people.

After this manner passed into history a very pleasant and profitable meeting of the religious forces of the churches in the eastern part of Clackamas county. We missed the editor of the NEWS, and he missed the fried chicken that Brother Mort and other preachers, not Methodists, ate.

Do you know we spend more than one third of our lives in bed? We should have the best. You can get them at Rose's.
