FARM REMINDERS

From Dept. Industrial Journalism, O. A. C.

The average price to farmers for No. 1 Burbank potatoes on the Portland market for the last nine years has been about $1.15 per bushel during October, November and December; an average of $1.36 from January to April; and an average of $1.80 during April and May, according to O. A. C. Extension service.

Large scale poultry on one, two and three tracts is a hazardous and generally short lived enterprise, according to H. E. Cosby, poultry specialist for Oregon extension service. Soil contamination with its attendant destructive diseases is almost sure to follow such system of management.

Construct poultry ranges and laying houses after the pattern of types that have proved their worth, advises H. E. Cosby, Poultry specialist for the extension service. Plans for successful houses can be had from any county agent or by writing the Oregon Agricultural, College, Corvallis, Oregon.

Experimental work at O. A. C. with potatoes has shown that hot formaldehyde and the corrosive sublimate treatment to be about equally effective. The corrosive sublimate treatment is best suited to small lots of potatoes, while, where there are to be large plantings, and where facilities are available for providing plenty of hot water, the hot formaldehyde treatment is most economical.

That 1925 should be a good corn year in Oregon, as there is not nearly enough corn produced in the state and there was a large amount of high class seed harvested in 1924 in both eastern and western Oregon, is the belief of experiment station authorities.
