STAR CAR GOES WHERE "ANGELS FEAR TO TREAD"

Seldom is the touch of human intellect that has been injected into the career of Julius Dusevoir, factory testing engineer, come to the attention of the motor world that coolly calculates the value of car performance in terms of revenue from sales.

Those who have been following Dusevoir's amazing demonstrations of power in the new 1925 Star Car all over the Pacific coast were even more convinced of the daring engineer's ability to go through where others—even the strongest—have failed, upon learning that Lloyds, Ltd., internationally known insurance underwriters, had refused to insure Dusevoir's life against accident.

According to word received by the local Star Car dealer, H. W. Curtis, director of sales of the Durant Motor Company of California, had tried in vain to insure Dusevoir for $50,000 against accident in the successful trials he had driven up the famous Waterman Canyon grade.

Lloyd's Ltd. is internationally known for its having underwritten many risks that other insurance brokers have flatly refused, and has a reputation of refusing practically no risks whatsoever.

Some of Dusevoir's stunts, demonstrating the Star Car's power on famous hills throughout the west, are the most daring that have ever been known to auto racers, drivers and owner alike. He has taken the Star Car where others have absolutely refused to drive because of the danger of terrific grades.
