EMERGENCY CALL TO HOP GROWERS

Oregon Agricultural College, Corvallis, July 18.—Hop growers who have been directing their sprays against the hop aphid already this season may have an additional pest to combat in the red spider, due to the hot weather, report the authorities for the experiment station. No control measures have been applied against the red spider this season so far, but some growers have already sprayed twice for the aphid and many have to spray again.

A combination spray to control both pests has been shown to be practical. The formula for the spray is commercial concentrated lime-sulfur, 2 gallons; calcium caseinate, 1 pound; sulfur (sublimated or dusting sulfur), 5 pounds nicotine sulfate, 6 ounces; and water to make 100 gallons.

The powdered caseinate and sulfur are first thoroughly mixed together and then water mixed slowly, working the mixture into a thin, homogeneous paste. The commercial lime-sulfur is poured into the spray tank, and water added. As the tank is filling, the sulfur paste added is poured through a strainer to remove the lumps. The nicotine sulfate is added last, just before spraying.

"Some growers obtained good results last season without adding the sulfur paste," says the station. "If this practice is followed, be sure to add the calcium caseinate to the tank after it is full and then add the nicotine just before spraying."
