VARIEGATED CUTWORMS RAID GARDEN AND FIELD

From department Industrial Journalism O. A. C.

Variegated cutworm are making serious raids on fields, garden and flower plants in most parts of western Oregon and in some parts of eastern Oregon. They eat every part of some plants—leaf, stem, and root—and also gnaw into such fruits as apples and tomatoes. Calls for help have come by hundreds to the experiment station and to county agents. Poison bran mash made as follows is the control recommended:

Mix 15 pounds of course bran with 10 ounces of paris green and 1 pint of salt. Dilute 1 pint of syrup with enough of water to make a moist crumbly mash such as will fall apart when dropped from the hand. Scatter this mash about the plants and over the infested ground, where the worms will find and eat it on their way to the plants.

This bait is preferred by the worms to the plants and is greedily eaten. It is likewise quickly fatal.

The variegated cutworm is always present, but its numbers are kept down by its natural enemies—a fly that lays an egg in the worm, and birds, fowls and even pigs. In favorable seasons it gets the jump on these and then destroys millions of dollars worth of crops unless checked by man. It was a bad pest in 1900 and in 1914, doing in one year 2 1/2 million dollars worth of damage.

The green worm is one and three-fourth inches long, rather fat, and of yellowish green to a dark brown color. It nearly always has a few yellowish dots on the middle part of the back. It is hatched from the eggs of a rather large moth with grayish red-tinged front wings and clear white rear ones with soft brown edges. The eggs are laid in masses on plants and even the family washing. The worms come out in March and again in mid summer in larger numbers.

THOMSON PORTRAYS DELIGHTFUL CHARACTER

"That Devil Quemado," Fred Thomson's latest and greatest western comedy drama will show at the Liberty Theatre next Tuesday and Wednesday. There is no question of Thomson's popularity with movie lovers, nor of the increasing admiration and wonder at the marvelous acting of Silver King, his beautiful horse. "That Devil Quemado" proves an excellent vehicle for the athletic star, as its author, Marvin Wilhite, doubtless intended it to be. Gloria Hope is a pretty, vivacious and wholly charming heroine, while all of the large cast proves adequate.
