

New Beauty Has Not Crowded Out Traditional Reliability

Interest in the attractive appearance of the latest Ford cars can never supersede regard for the quality of materials and workmanship that has made the Ford car the world's leading automobile value. Ford cars enjoy their remarkable reputation for reliability and long-life only because such fine materials and such careful, accurate workmanship go into them. In every part of the car, quality has been steadily improved and the high standard set, is maintained uniformly by ceaseless testing, inspection and checks. The very volume of Ford output necessitates absolute accuracy in every manufacturing operation. The steady, forward flow of production is dependent on parts fitting together perfectly; inaccuracies would interrupt and delay assembly. And to this precision must be credited largely the uniformly fine performance and freedom from trouble of all Ford cars. When you see the smart-looking cars now offered, bear in mind the high standard of quality they represent.

RUINING THE RIVERS OF OREGON

The rivers of Oregon belong to the public use and benefit. They are highways the same as tree-bordered country or state roads. Our streams are for bathing, boating and other forms of recreation. These waterways are the homes of different species of trout and salmon which are important food products. The rivers of Oregon are, therefore, among the most valuable resources of the state. It is the plain duty of every citizen to protect his interest so that he may share in the benefits.

With the building of mills, factories, manufacturing plants and the growth of towns and cities along our waterways, some Oregon streams are facing ruin and others are threatened. The wastes of industries and the combined filth of municipal corporations are dumped into public waters to such an extent that some streams are like open sewers, spreading disease to people and destroying fish life. It is time to call a halt.

A private or municipal corporation that dumps filth into a flowing stream transfers corruption to people lower down. It is like a man who dumps his dirt over the back fence into the yard of his neighbor. The practice is wrong both legally and morally. The people of Estacada pollute the Clackamas river, one of the most beautiful streams of the state, by dumping in their sewage, while lower down the people of Gladstone use the water of this same river for drinking purpose.

The common practice of polluting our public waters if not corrected will in time destroy trout, salmon and other food fishes, the very misfortune that has fallen to many of the rivers of the Atlantic coast. Water to a fish is what air is to a person. Fish are subject to disease as people are. They cannot live in filth. A river can digest a certain amount of sewage, but if the stench is fed a stream year after year in increased quantities, the river overtaxed breaks down and the water is poisoned for trout and salmon.

What is to be done? It is the duty of a manufacturing plant to take care of its waste products. A sawmill is always summoned into court for dumping sawdust in a river. Why is a pulp or woolen mill allowed to wash its acids, dyes and other waste into public waters? It is the duty of the officers of a municipal corporation to take some steps toward relieving our rivers from their load of filth. Bend, Redmond, Pendleton, Ashland and other cities have faced the problem and disposed of their sewage in a hygienic way. The commissioners of the city of Portland have recently taken the first steps to correct the abuse of the Willamette river which has grown up through many years, and they have the biggest problem in Oregon. When will other cities along the Willamette like Oregon City, Salem, Albany, Corvallis and Eugene cease polluting public waters? A start must be made sooner or later. Why not now?

The general laws of Oregon for 1921, Section 70, Chapter 153, clearly provide that it is an offense against the state for any person or corporation to corrupt or impair the quality of public waters so they cannot be used for domestic or municipal purposes.

A Little Pig Story.

A pig litter exhibit by Glenn Ohling of Albany, Route 3, attracted considerable attention at the state fair. There were 12 pigs in the litter, 6 months old, total weight 2670 pounds and he sold them for 13 1/2 cents per pound. He fed them four tons of feed at a cost of $35, and they netted him over $200.
