HELPS FOR THE CAR OWNER

Do you know that denatured alcohol makes one of the best antifreeze solutions for your radiator? A 20 per cent solution of alcohol with the addition of a small amount from time to time is sufficient to protect your radiator from freezing in weather as low as 10 below zero. As the rainy season sets in, a liberal application of oil on all exposed bearing parts will save the extra wear caused by mud and water.

GONE MAUDLIN

Convicted by a jury in the Portland municipal court of the manufacture and possession of illicit whisky, a big bootlegger was sentenced by Judge Ekwall to serve six months in jail for the manufacture and to pay a fine of $1000 on the two counts.

The case was appealed. In the circuit court the defendant pleaded guilty.

The judge there cut the fine from $1000 to $500.

Why the cut? The lower court heard the evidence and knew the offense to be an aggravated violation of the law. How could the higher court know or have reason to believe that the fine should be reduced? It was merely one man's judgment against another's, and the judge in the lower court was more familiar with the facts.

Then why the cut? What was the effect of the cut but to encourage appeals, clutter up circuit court dockets and undermine the effectiveness of the lower court?

In the municipal court a man was convicted by a jury of driving while drunk. Judge Ekwall sentenced him to pay a fine and serve 90 days in jail.

The case was appealed. The defendant pleaded guilty in the circuit court. The judge there cut his jail sentence from 90 to 30 days. As in the other case, it was one man's judgment against the other, and the judge in the lower court heard the testimony, knew all the facts and fixed a sentence of 90 days. The circuit judge, ignoring the judgment of the lower court, reduced it to 30 days.

In each of these two peanut appeals, the effect was to delay justice approximately three months, to weaken the prestige of the municipal court and clutter up already congested circuit court dockets.

It is the administration of justice gone maudlin. It is law made silly. These and scores of cases like them

Mr. and Mrs. G. P. Rose drove to Salem last Friday, where they met their daughter Pauline, who is attending the O.A.C. at Corvallis. It was Miss Rose's birthday, and she had to come home to celebrate the event with her parents, brothers and other relatives.

Paul Syron, son of Mr. and Mrs. O. E. Syron, celebrated his 12th birthday last Saturday afternoon by inviting 12 of his school mates to his home. Games were played, and the boys had a delightful time. Two large birthday cakes, ice cream, salad and sandwiches were served by Paul's mother.

The M. E. church of this place has been thoroughly cleaned and the floor newly varnished. There was a large attendance at the Sunday services, both morning and evening. Most remarkable Sunday morning was the attendance of as many men in the audience as women. Miss Aita Kurshner sang a solo during the morning service and in the evening Ralph Baker played a violin solo. The Sunday school rally was a great success.

ARMISTICE DAY REFLECTIONS. J. A. Gilkey, Corvallis, in the Oregon Journal.

Time will heal the awful scars
Invading armies made,
Madly following the fierce Hussars
With cannon, gas and blade.

The vales of France again will yield
The fruits of tree and vine;
Her shell-torn hills old Time will shield
With oak and fir and pine.

O'er Flanders' fields, where poppies grow,
Where 'neath them brave men lie,
The lark, just as in long ago,
Will sing in Flanders' sky.

Cathedral walls men will restore;
Cathedral bell's will toll;
Along those sacred aisles once more
Will Flemish lovers stroll.

The war-wrecked gardens, torn and maimed,
Will seem as fresh and fair;
The war-scarred fields will be reclaimed;
But still the scars are there.

The million homes made desolate
By Teuton's hellish arts
Will always feel the burdening weight
Of sore and broken hearts.

In time those broken hearts will heal,
E'en though the scars remain;
And peace will come because we feel
They did not die in vain.

God's blessing on our brave and true,
The living and the dead,
Who stopped the swelling tide of war
Ere Liberty had fled!

Profit

Is the only reason for keeping cows. To make this profit they must be fed correctly. Your own oats, if ground and mixed with either 25 per cent oil meal or 33 1-3 per cent cocoanut meal makes a balanced ration. We can grind your oats and sell you the oil or cocoanut meal. It is good practice to mix some mill run with this mixture.

RHUBARD IN WINTER

By C. T. Gregory.

It is easy to grow rhubarb in the cellar as I found to my surprise last winter, and furthermore, to produce more tender and juicy stalks than ever are produced out of doors. Imagine harvesting ever; week in February and in March from four to six pounds of fine rhubarb from roots growing in a barrel and two boxes in the cellar.

The beginning of this venture was more or less the result of a stroke of luck by which I obtained six large rhubarb roots last fall. After a rather sharp freezing during the latter part of November the roots were transferred to the cellar and laid in a single layer in a barrel and two boxes. Enough dirt to cover barely the roots was thrown over them and worked in around them. Sand or ashes might also have been used.

One of the boxes was rather shallow so a rough framework was constructed over it to support an old carpet thrown over the container. The stalks produced are much longer and have a better color if grown in the dark. About Christmas time the sprouts began to appear and by the middle of January the first crop of three pounds was harvested. A week later and each week since their larger crops have been picked.

The rhubarb is beautiful red with small yellowish leaves. It is extremely tender and practically devoid of that stringiness so common in the summer rhubarb. Anyone who can secure a few rhubarb roots which are at least two years old will find that it will pay to transplant them into a barrel in a warm cellar. The only care needed is to sprinkle them once in a while. Abe Martin says, "It is no sign of friendship to give away rhubarb in August," but fresh rhubarb in February certainly makes friends.

sheep obtainable. Experts were sent to the exhibition at Wembley, England, where animals from all over the world are exhibited. From there the experts came to Madras, Oregon, where they purchased the sheep they wanted. They described the Oregon animals as the hardest of any they had been able to find, with the largest frames and carrying the highest grade of wool.

The sale of the Oregon sheep is further evidence of the possibilities of this state. We have the lumber, the grains, the dairies, the vegetables, the fruits, the cattle, the fish and millions of dollars of other resources. And we can grow what the Russian experts found to be the best sheep in the world.

Although it is a common practice in some of the rainy winter districts of Oregon to leave dairy cows out in the rain, they are better off under shelter. It takes good feed that might better be used for production to keep them warm when exposed to the weather. The shelter is better and less expensive than the extra feed.

J. M. C. MILLER

SANDY.—J. M. C. Miller, 71, old-time local resident, died Tuesday night at his home here as a result of cancer. He had a small farm outside of town, but made his home here. He was born in Pittsburgh, Pa., in 1854. Survivors include his widow, Emma Bennett Miller, and three grandchildren. One of his granddaughters, Drusilla Jean Miller, made her home with her grandparents. Funeral arrangements have not been definitely made.

LADIES' AID SHOW

A moving picture at the Liberty theater tonight is under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid of the M. E. church. This picture was shown last night, and those attending said it was a good picture. Local people should make it a point to attend tonight and help to swell the treasury of the society if for nothing more.
