ADS AID CHURCH WORK

The value to church work of newspaper advertising was recently affirmed by Oscar A. Cooper, and members of the Christian church in this city when the pastor and the society contracted with the Herald for advertising space to be used each week, and paid for at regular advertising rates the same as any other commercial institution, says the Canby Herald.

The church is a business proposition, said Mr. Cooper, and we believe that it can be benefitted by paid advertising just as any business can be benefitted.

Mr. Cooper has always advocated a proper amount of publicity on the part of the church in order that its patrons may be informed in a general way as to operating and financial conditions as affecting the members of the society. He believes that advertising will assist in maintaining a relationship of good will and cooperation; and he believes, too, that the publisher should not be expected to donate this required publicity to aid in the church's up-building.

We believe Mr. Cooper is right in his convictions. The experience and observation of the writer has been that frequently church goers complain of the omission of publicity relative to church events. This is reflected on the publisher which, as a matter of fact, lies with the members of the church who fail to give to the publisher the information required. If a church society has its own advertising space, and the pastor or some committee is authorized to fill this advertising space, the desire of the people and the requirements of the society will be met.

OREGON HAS GAIN OF 5703 FARMS IN 5 YEARS

Oregon registered a gain of 5703 in number of farms from 1920 to 1925 on the basis of figures issued by the bureau of census. This gain of more than 1000 farms a year during the period of severe depression in farm prices was made in western Oregon, for east of the Cascades 14 counties have fewer than five years ago.

Five counties of western Oregon have gained more than 500 farms in the five-year period, and it is noted that all are in the vicinity of the centers of population, where cultivation is more intensive and large farms are frequently subdivided. Marion county leads with a gain of 1202, Clackamas has 1189 more, Lane 889, Washington 875, and Columbia 604. Jackson is just behind with a gain of 422.

Curry is the only western county with a decrease. East of the Cascades the losers are Baker, Crook, Deschutes, Gilliam, Grant, Jefferson, Klamath, Lake, Morrow, Sherman, Union, Wallowa, Wasco and Wheeler. Multnomah with 1988 farms has an increase of 160.

The total farms for the state are 55,980, against 50,206 in 1920. The census bureau counts as a farm the land farmed by one person or by members of his family and hired help. If he has tenants or renters each of these is counted as having a farm.

Washington shows practically the same tendencies as Oregon, with a gain of 6888 farms and the gain centered in the western part of the state, particularly in King, Pierce, Snohomish, Kitsap and Thurston counties. Yakama, however, gained 586 farms, while 16 counties east of the mountains were losing. Clarke has an increase of 354.

BRIDGE INCLUDED IN LEVY FOR 1926.

A levy of $14,100 for improvement of streets and bridges within the city limits of Oregon City was voted at a meeting of taxpayers of the Oregon City road district Saturday night. The levy will be a 3 mill tax. Of the sum $8000 will be used for the construction of a bridge over the Madison street gulch and $5000 for the purchase of a street flusher. A first payment of $1100 to the state highway commission as part of Oregon City's share in the pavement of the south end road was voted. Residents of the section at the north end of Madison street have been seeking the construction of a new bridge for several years. Activity of the Buena Vista Improvement club has been directed to that end, and lack of finances has been the chief deterrent in the past. Installation of a street cleaning system was heartily endorsed by more than 60 property owners present.

Did you ever stop to think that if buying is slow it may be because prices are too high? And did it ever occur to business that the consumer has to fit his outgo to his income, and that if he hasn't the money he can't buy? Does it ever occur to the manufacturer that he kills his own market sometimes by demanding too heavy a profit? The wider prosperity is diffused the greater the total buying power and the heavier the selling. That is an inexorable law that nobody can change.

"Promiscuous petting" cost 24 Pasadena high school students one dollar each when they were arraigned in police court Friday. Thirteen other students who were caught in a round up of necking parties failed to appear in answer to a police summons, and will be brought into court on bench warrants.

A VEGETARIAN ROMANCE.

"Come, lettuce get married," said Artie.
"Will your celery keep two?" asked she.
"With carrot will do and I think, dear."
"Something better will turnip," said he.
She replied, slightly radish from blushing.
(Though her rouge was parsley the fault).
"I've always bean true, and I'll still be."
"Though your kale may not keep us in salt."
So off to old Pars'n Ipp's cottage Onion road, the wedding to stage. They spud, and it took but a second.
In this modern taxi-cabbage. But you can't beet a taxi-cab meter; Appeasing the bill left him broke. Caused a lump to sprout in his thorax, And nearly made poor Artichoke. However, they were not cross-fallen; road.

To the house on the corner they went.
Woke the Pars'nip from his slumber. On the greensward held the event. Of a Cole's he made her a present, And they now take a spinach night—
And this is the endive my story For there isn't muchroom left to write.—N. H. Randall.

WAR CRY

The Salvation army issued a special Portland number last week, which contained many Oregon views, write-ups and a message from Governor Pierce. The News was favored with a copy.
