

A PROGRESSIVE PROGRAM

The fact that the latest Ford cars are offered without increase in price means more to the public than the mere saving in money—it gives even added confidence in the soundness of Ford methods and policy. To build to an ever-advancing standard of beauty, comfort and convenience without increasing price, is possible only through Ford resources, facilities, production methods and volume of output.

Every Ford owner is assured more than a present saving—he can feel confident of the sustained quality, both in performance and service, which makes his car a sound and satisfying investment.

NEWS LETTER

By C. E. Spence, State Market Agent.

The Canadian Way.—Apparently the department of agriculture of Canada considers it as much its mission to help sell as to help raise, and it has purchased 25,000 barrels of Ontario's big apple crop to sell overseas, returning the profits to the growers. The government will also put on an advertising campaign for the apples, both at home and in other countries.

Costs, Middle Profits, Taxation.—One doesn't have to be a farmer to know that farming has been the poorest paid of all industries for some years, says the state market agent. Operating costs have reached the sky, taxes are steadily mounting, while the prices of products paid to the farmer have not anywhere kept pace. No matter how abundant our harvests may be, or how great the output of mines, forest or fisheries, state-wide prosperity cannot come if farming costs, taxation and middle profit tolls rise in proportion. If it takes about all the average farmer receives to pay his taxes and operating expenses, he is more of a liability than asset to his community, and the many small agricultural cities that depend largely on farmer buying. Statistics of big crops and outputs mean little to general prosperity when producers get but one-third of the price consumers pay for the products. Every farmer knows the cost of the day buyers demand more grad-of production to remedy this condition, while Herbert Hoover tells him he must produce less. Either of these men know that what the farmers really need for relief is a just system of taxation, based on income—ability to pay—and powerful selling agencies to cut down enormous middle handling expenses and profits. Given this relief and the same tariff protection, manufacturers thrive under, farming would be a profitable industry and business of the whole state would prosper with it. We don't produce too much, we consume too little.

Taking Off the Robes.—Two co-operative organizations of strength and standing now permit members to withdraw and market outside if they care to. They are the Pacific Co-operative Poultry association of Portland and the Tobacco Growers' association of Hopkinston, Ky. This course may be taken by associations after they have become thoroughly established and powerful enough to be big market price factors, but until they are in this position and are strong enough to withstand the fighting strength of private interests, which attack most co-operatives, absolutely essential. Neither the egg association or the tobacco pool could have attained their present strength without such contracts.

On Basis of Quality.—The farmer who is wise will grade and produce high quality of everything. Every day buyers demand more grading and consumers demand more from retailers. It is only fairness that products be paid for according to quality and market value. Something that will make first grade should not be paid for at a second grade price. Quality basis is a just basis. The farmer who produces better products should get better prices.

DOUGLAS MILL ABOUT READY

LATE ARRIVAL OF EASTERN MACHINERY RETARDS WORK

ENGINE IS RECONSTRUCTED

Numerous Orders on Hand to Be Filled; Slab Wood Being Sent to Portland.

The Douglass sawmill will be in operation full blast next week, according to an announcement of Ed Douglass, owner. The old mill was destroyed by fire a few weeks ago.

"We are somewhat handicapped at the present time," said Mr. Douglass Saturday, "in getting under way on account of the non-arrival of some machinery, which is being shipped here from the east. This should arrive almost any day, and when unloaded from the cars it will be but a few days until actual sawing will commence."

The engine, which went through the fire, has been rebuilt. Mechanics have been busy lately completely overhauling it, and it is thought to be in as good condition as before the fire.

Mr. Douglass is very anxious to get things going again. He has numerous orders on hand to fill. Most of these are for railroad ties.

A number of trucks have been moving slab wood from the mill to Cedar Brook lately, where it is loaded on cars, bound for Portland.

Ancient French Title

The title "dauphin" was borne by the heirs-apparent to the crown of France, under the Valois and Bourbon dynasties. In 1349, Humbert II, the last of the princes of Dauphine, having no issue, left his domains to Philip of Valois, king of France, on condition that the king's eldest son be called the dauphin.

The first dauphin was Jean, afterwards John the Good, and the last the Duc d'Angoulême, son of Charles X, who renounced the title in 1830. It is said that Guy VIII, an ancestor of Humbert II, was surnamed Le Dauphin, because he wore a dolphin as an emblem on his helmet or shield. This surname remained to his descendants, who were styled Dauphins, and the country they governed was called Dauphine. The wife of the dauphin was called the dauphine—hence the City Star.

Laugh

The afternoon salesman gave a laugh.

"Do you see that dame with the diamond stonemacher?" he said. "Well, she must be one of them new-rich millionaires."

"Yes? Why so?"

"She's been buying sugar tongs—solid silver, you know. She chose our most expensive tong, and then she said:

"I'll take a dozen."

"A dozen?" I said, surprised.

"Yes; one for each person," says she.

"Then she kind of red-nod. She said: 'I never give big parties,' she says. 'A dozen'll be quite enough, you see.'"

Say you saw it in the News.

Can't All Be Vegetarians

There is one very good reason why we cannot all be vegetarians, even if we would. In the first place there are not enough vegetables in the world to feed everybody, and in the second place there is not enough land on which to grow vegetables. Meat is concentrated vegetable food. Again, we must have leather, wool, feathers, horn, ivory, fur, kid, hides, hair, etc., and to get these usually means the death of the animal. So, we put our coverings outside, and their flesh inside. Vegetarianism is good enough for poets, artists and preachers, but the strenuous, virile, fighting, aggressive man requires meat.—Benny.

Beech for Fuel

Beeches are beautiful throughout the year. From the ground to their polished slender twigs the gray to brown bark is clean and smooth, and both bark and twigs are so distinctive that they are not to be confused with other trees of the forest. These trees are famed not only for their beauty but for their many useful products as well, says "Tree Habits" by the American Nature association. Their wood Positive evidence. I can bring witnesses to swear they heard him ask me to umpire a football game.
