Sale of Freighters To McCormick Line

Washington, Jan. 19.—(Washington Bureau of the Journal)—The shipping board today approved the sale of the Pacific Argentine-Brazil line of six freighters at $49,000 each to the McCormick Steamship Co. The board requires the purchaser to put up a bond of $200,000, conditioned upon regular operation for five years with Seattle as the North Pacific terminus.

Approval was given after the board received a report from President Crowley of the Emergency Fleet corporation, recommending the sale.

Although only freight type steamers are used in the service, few shipping board sales have attracted as much attention, on this coast at least, as that of the Pacific Argentine-Brazil line. This condition was due to the fact that two large companies were bidding for the line and also because it is the only line in operation between the north Pacific coast and the important trade centers on the Atlantic coast of South America.

INTERESTS CENTERED HERE

Locally the award of the line is considered of especial importance because of the status of the Charles R. McCormick Steamship company on the Columbia river. The major portion of the McCormick interests are located in this district and it is understood here that Portland is considered the Northwest gateway of the McCormick combination.

Another important angle to the award of the line is the connection between this coast and the Munson Steamship company, big operator on the east coast of the United States. The Munson interests recently purchased the Pan-American service of combination passenger and cargo ships which operates between New York and the east coast of South America. The connecting link lies in the Munson-McCormick line, which is operated jointly between the two companies in the intercoastal trade. Thus the line will have strong connections at both ends of its route.

IN GOOD CONDITION

While Swayne & Hunt have sent their vessels into Portland irregularly during their four years of operation, it is believed that the award of the line to McCormick will mean that Portland will be the most important of the Northwest ports in future operation.

The six ships have fared well under the management of Swayne & Hoyt. It is said to be in fine condition and their masters and officers are often complimented by the appearance of the vessels when they arrive here.

One of the vessels, the West Camargo, is now in port loading at the McCormick terminals for the return to the south. The others are the Hollywood, West Cactus, West Lotus, West Conob and West Nido. The West Gumbo recently was added but is not included in the sale. They are of the standard 8800-ton type of freighter. The vessels are operated both north and south, via the Panama canal route, with rare exceptions when one may go around the southern extremity of South America and through the Straits of Magellan.

Lumber and general cargo are in need, bones and general freight are brought in this direction.
