ONE MONTH'S SERMONS

All approve the proposal. Laymen, not ministers, write the letters.

These are first thoughts that arise from comments on the suggestion, twice repeated by The Journal, that the ministers of America preach one month's sermons from the Sermon on the Mount.

One of the laymen bluntly insists that the ministers have not the courage. It is the most revolutionary proposal ever made, he submits. The results of a month's—or, as he prefers it, a year's—sermons from the Sermon on the Mount would be a new social order and new relationships in business and industry.

The fear of revenge planned by exponents of the established order would, he adds, seal the pulpits against the great plan of Christian unity.

Another remarks the fact that Christ's sayings are rarely quoted direct but are uttered more in the terms of the Pauline interpretation which he holds to be antagonistic to the doctrine taught by the Nazarene, of faith demonstrated by works.

But the Journal does not believe that ministers lack the courage. It does not believe that they are incapable of unity. It does not challenge their consecration nor impute to them a greater desire for a worldly than a spiritual indorsement.

The Journal does believe that ministers lack the habit of unity. It believes that many of them are not close enough to the masses of people at work to realize that the great human need is not a technical and disputive doctrinal discussion, which sounds like Greek to most people, but a clear distinction between right and wrong, a simple identification of sin as the thing that hurts you and a recognition of the miraculous effect of faith in life quite as impressively as toward the one to come.

In other words this proposal for a month's sermon from the Sermon on the Mount is a proposal for simultaneous utterance of the social gospel proclaimed in the matchless phrases of the Galilean.

The effect would be revolutionary. It would make religion the greatest news story of the month. It would exert the power of a great revival. It would claim the theological disension within and among the denominations. It would have salutary effect on modern conditions. Practice of the teachings of the Sermon on the Mount would leave no room for child labor, underpaid workers, greedy capitalistic combinations, law violations, lustful marriages, matrimonial infidelity, quick divorces, a rotten deal for your neighbor, or that revengeful code of an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth, which sometimes intrudes upon business and the courts.

The discouraged comment here is that there are a lot of things that cannot be budgeted, and that to attempt to do so is all very well for theorists and dreamers but nothing for practical people to bother about.

They said, however, that slavery couldn't be budgeted. They said that planter's couldn't live if they had to pay wages to their blacks. They said that employers couldn't survive, paying fair wages to their factory hands. But slavery was budgeted. Adequate pay didn't hurt but helped business. We understand now that the community borrows its prosperity from the prosperity of individuals, and that the greatest possible disaster is to lodge in the hands of a few the wealth and influence which have been looted from the many.

There have been statements that the Golden Rule, a part of the Sermon on the Mount, couldn't be applied this side of the millennium. But the most successful businesses and the strongest business clubs of this day are premised on the Golden Rule.

It will be further said that the bitter contention of recent great denominational conventions leaves no hope for unity. The disension is so futile that it actually creates a vacuum which must be filled—and why not by unity?

The denominations need not merge their boundaries to offer a month's exposition of the Sermon on the Mount. Jews and Gentiles can get together if not on the author, then upon the truths therein. Though in the doctrinal dispute there is often the pathetic, echoed cry of the father whose son was possessed by a demon, "I believe, help thou mine unbelief," the probabilities are that the religious leaders will wrangle themselves back on a firm foundation. The vitality of Christianity has survived worse attacks. If this proposal of a month's sermons has vitality it will also win if sufficiently repeated.

And it may be the best sign, among all, that the laymen write the letters.—Journal.

THE VULTURES FATTEN

National Farm News: "When farm products sell in the city markets at seven to eight times the amount the farmer gets for them, it isn't hard to understand that there is 'something rotten in Denmark.' The 'vultures' who ply their trade between producers and consumers, keeping farm prices down and market prices up, while they feed upon both without doing a solitary stroke to aid either, should and could be regulated or entirely destroyed if our lawmakers desired."

MRS. HOOVER TURNS BRICKLAYER

Mrs. Herbert Hoover, wife of the Secretary of Commerce in President Coolidge's cabinet, is shown laying the cornerstone for the model home being erected by Better Homes in America organization at the Sesqui-Centennial International Exposition, in Philadelphia, June 1 to December 1 to celebrate 150 years of American Independence. Opposite Mrs. Hoover stands Mrs. Vance McCormick of Harrisburg. The Girl Scouts grouped around the women will be the house.

CHAD ALTON

Short skirts have been introduced in China. Now we shall be able to distinguish the male from the female by their legs.

President Coolidge recommends the celebration of the 4th of July this year from June 28 to July 5, a one-week period. That ought to satisfy the small boy and the man afraid of work.

If honest effort is made in any sport or undertaking, the fact that we do not win need not be disheartening. The best that is in us is all that can be required, and that demonstrated is compensation sufficient.

California wine-grape growers find that since 1912 and during prohibition the price of their product has advanced from $12 per ton to $58 in 1925. The fear that their business was going to be ruined does not seem to have been well founded.

A Yakima newspaper was turned over to a local preacher to edit for one week according to his will. At the end of the time he said he had enough of it, as the work was too strenuous. Anyone who imagines the editor has a snap has another guess coming.
