LONG JOURNEY FOR ART'S RIGHT HAND

Arthur Edson, cameraman for Douglas Fairbanks, figured that this year his right hand traveled more than 284 miles further than the rest of his high salaried self. No, it isn't an artificial hand; it's all muscle and bone, equipped with five agile digits that helped to "put over" the astounding feats of photography featured in "The Thief of Bagdad," which comes to the Liberty Theatre Aug. 18 and 19.

Here's how Edson explains the journey his good right hand took, knowing that a cameraman can be a good mathematician as well.

"In the past year, I've ground 30,000 feet of film. Each foot means two turns of the camera crank, or 960,000 turns. The length of the crank is 6 inches, which makes each revolution cover 18.85 inches. Multiply this by the 960,000 and we have 18,096,000 inches or over 284 miles."

Divorce is becoming a flaming disgrace in our social life. Too many couples rush headlong into matrimony on the impulse of what they take for love but which is only an infatuation that is not diagnosed until the gilt is rubbed off and the baser reality is exposed. Then it is too late for anything except the court of domestic relations. Why in the name of common sense cannot men and women learn before the union whether they have minds congenial for the future happiness of both, and not disgrace themselves and the innocent and unfortunate issue of their folly?

Stand from under all ye oldtime roses. Rector of a Baltimore church says the younger generation has the older generation for an example. Dad, how about it?
