

The Leading Lady

By GERALDINE BONNER

WNU Service

(Copyright by The Bobbs-Merrill Co.)

STORY FROM THE START

While despondent over the enforced hiding of her fiancé, Jim Dallas, slayer in self-defense of Homer Parkinson, member of an influential family, Sybil Saunders, popular actress, is engaged to play Viola in a charity performance of "Twelfth Night" on Gull Island, on the Maine coast. After the play Huch Bassett, Anne Tracy's fiancé, tells Joe he has heard he is spying on Sybil to learn the whereabouts of Jim Dallas and earn the reward offered by the Parkinson family. The boy denies it.

CHAPTER II—Continued

He stopped. Bassett's eye was steady on him in a cold command he knew. There was the same cold quality in the director's voice: "If the position Sybil's in has made her suspicious, that's all right. I'd like to believe it was the case. But if any of us—supposedly her friends—had inserted themselves in here to carry on police surveillance, using me to get them in—well, I'd not think that all right."

Joe leaned over the banister. His control was shaken, his voice hoarsely urgent: "You got to be fair, Bassett, and because you're sorry for her is no reason to set her word over mine. It's not true. Don't you believe me?"

Bassett did not answer for a moment. He wanted to believe and he doubted; he thought of Joe's desire to come, of the reward: "I guess you know, Joe, you can trust me to be fair, but I'm not going to commit myself till I know. It won't be hard to do that. I can find out when I get back to New York. And take this from me—if what Sybil says is true I'm done with you. No more help from me, no more work in any company I manage. And I fancy the whole theatrical profession will feel the same way." He drew back from the stair-foot. The disagreeable interview was over. "There's no good talking any more about it. Accusations and denials don't get us anywhere. We'll let it rest till I've made my inquiries. I'll say good-by now and hope you'll have a good time in the woods."

He turned and walked up the hall to his room on the garden front next the Stokes'. Joe gathered his luggage and went the opposite way, down the hall and into the big central apartment. At the entrance door he set down his luggage and as he bent over it a whispered stream of curses flowed from his lips. He cursed Bassett and his luck, but Sybil with a savage variety of epithet and choice of misfortune, for she had undone him. Straightening up, he looked blankly about—his inner turmoil was such he hardly knew where he was—and he retraced his steps, seeking the seclusion of his room, went up the stairs in noiseless vaulting strides like a frightened spider climbing to its web.

CHAPTER III

Anne had taken off her costume and slipped into a negligee to do her packing comfortably, and then decided she had better bid good-by to Joe first. She wanted to tell him her great secret, see an answering joy leap into his face, for he thought more of Bassett than anybody, and he'd be so surprised to hear that Anne, her charms held at a low valuation, had won such a prize.

She passed the long line of closed doors, voices coming from behind Mrs. Cornell's, and reaching Joe's knocked. A "come in," uninvitingly loud and harsh, answered her and she entered. Joe was sitting in a low armchair, bent forward, his hands holding a cane with which he was tapping the floor. He looked up to see who it was; then, without greeting or comment, drooped his head and went on lightly striking the cane on the carpet as if he were hammering in a nail and it required all his attention, then raised his head and looked at her—what have you come here for? the look said.

It was not a reception to encourage confidences and she stood uncomfortably regarding him, trying to find something to say that would dispel his somber ill humor.

"You're all ready? Where's your luggage?"

"Down by the door. Is there anything else you want to know?"

"I don't want to know, I was thinking of you. You're always late, and it's different here with only one way to get ashore and Gabriel never willing to wait."

He made no answer, continuing his play with the cane. She knew that something was wrong and sat down on the arm of a chair, uneasy, wondering what it was: "I'm glad you've managed this holiday. And it's jolly having Tommy Travers, he's such a sport. You'll meet him tonight at Bangor. At the Algonquin Inn—wasn't that the name of it?"

"Um."

"I want to be sure, because if any important mail should come for you I could send it there to meet you on your way back. Algonquin Inn—I'll remember that. Then off tomorrow morning—it'll be lovely in the woods now."

"Any place would be lovely after this beastly hole."

"Beastly hole! I thought you liked it!"

"Did you? Take another guess."

"You expected to like it. You wanted to come."

He made no answer, but slanting his body sidewise with an air of ostentatious endurance, took out his watch and looked at it. She ignored the hint—you couldn't be sensitive with Joe—and leaning toward him asked:

"What's the matter, Joe?"

"Matter—with what?"

"You! Has anything happened?"

"Oh, no, nothing's happened." His words were mincingly soft. "What could happen with such a charming lot of people and Miss Saunders playing the star role in the performance and out?"

It was Sybil then—he'd been working himself into a bad temper over her treatment of him. Anne had thought it odd he had not mentioned it before:

"You're angry with Sybil, and I don't think she has been very nice to you. I've noticed it, especially the last three days and this afternoon when we were sitting out there on the rock I tried to make her tell me why."

He raised his head; the profile sharply defined against the window showed a working muscle in the cheek; "And did she tell you?"

"No, she didn't seem to want to talk about it. She changed the subject. There's no use getting annoyed about it, because I don't think she has any reason. You have to make excuses for her. She's gone through this awful experience and her nerves are all wracked to pieces. You have to be patient and take her as a sort of afflicted person—"

He dashed the cane down and jumped to his feet in a volcanic explosion of rage: "I don't take her that way. I take her for what she is, a d-d lying hypocrite."

"Joe!" She was amazed, not so much at the words as at the suddenness of the outburst and the contorted passion of his face.

"She thinks she can treat me any way she wants and get away with it. Well, she'll find her mistake, she's taken the wrong turning this time. She takes me for a yellow dog she can kick whenever she feels like it. But I got teeth—I can bite. Patient—be patient—G-d, I'd like to wring her neck, the d-d—"

He used an epithet that brought Anne to her feet, breathing battle: "Don't dare to say that of my friend, Joe Tracy."

He stood in front of her, hump-shouldered, with outthrust jaw, brows drawn low over eyes gleaming like a cat's. She had never seen him look like that; he seemed a stranger, a horrible stranger, and she drew away, aghast at the revelation of a being so sinisterly unfamiliar. Her look brought him back to self-control. He jerked his head up, ran a hand over his hair, and turned away to the window. Standing there he said:

"Well, I take that back. I didn't mean to say it. But she's made me mad; I think she'd make anybody."

The tone, surly still, had a placating quality; it was as near an apology as Joe could ever come. She felt immeasurably relieved, for he had frightened her. She accepted his amends without comment, but she could not resist a sisterly admonition: "If you'd only stop getting mad over small things you'd find life so much easier."

He laughed: "Good advice from little sister! It doesn't cost anything and it's the correct ingenue pose."

He turned from the window smiling. Joe at his most amiable. If he had met her this way she would have poured out her secret. But her high mood had fallen and besides he wanted her to go—he said he had a letter to write yet. Lounging toward her he put his hands on her shoulders, gave her a light kiss on the cheek and pushed her toward the door.

On her way back along the gallery she recalled his face in that moment of rage with troubled question. She wondered if there was more disturbing than she knew—it was an extraordinary exhibition of anger for such a cause. She heaved a sigh of relief at the thought that he was going. In his present mood there was no knowing what clashes there might be, and it was the last evening, and there would be a full moon, and she and Bassett would walk like lovers under its magic light.

When her door had closed, the gallery and living room became as quiet as though the house were unoccupied. Sybil, approaching it, heard no sound of voices, a fact that reassured her, for the long day had tired her and she had no mind for talk. She was coming in by the balcony when she saw Flora Stokes sitting there reading and deflected her course toward the path that skirted the building's front. If Flora noticed her she made no sign, her eyes glued to her book, and Sybil, stepping softly, for she dreaded the woman's resentful glances, passed along to the entrance of the living room. The place was deserted and she stopped on the threshold for a last look at the sky's fading splendors.

Across the depths of the room the door into the hall opened, but so gently that she did not hear it. Stokes made this noiseless entrance in the hope that she might be there, and now, seeing his hope fulfilled, closed the door as carefully, standing against it watching her.

Seeing that she did not turn he pronounced her name. At that she wheeled, lightning-quick, and came forward from beneath the deep jut of the gallery assuming as unconcerned a manner as she could.

"Lovely evening," she said as she advanced. "It's been hard to come in."

"Evidently from the length of time you stayed out there. I've been waiting for you."

It was not a propitious beginning, especially as he still stood against the door as if intending to bar her exit. "I'm going upstairs to dress now."

"There's plenty of time. You can give me a few minutes. I've something I want to say to you."

"Oh, Aleck!" She stopped with an air of weary expostulation. "Don't say anything more. Don't begin that dreadful subject. I'm sick of it. I loathe it and can't you see it isn't any use?"

He went on as if he hadn't heard her: "I've been trying for days, ever since I came here. And you keep avoiding me, always having some one with you. Now we'll be going tomorrow, we may not have another chance, and I must see you and tell you"—he stopped and looked at the gallery. "Did I hear a step up there?"

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

"But I Got Teeth—I Can Bite."

This Mortal Life Merely Qualifying Ground for the Life Hereafter

By REV. DR. BENNETT, Dean Chester Cathedral, England.

UNLESS man qualifies himself during his sojourn on earth he cannot hope for any sort of life in the world to come. The outstanding lesson of the whole organic process of life is that any organ which would enrich itself must first qualify itself, and, therefore, if we who are here are to have any life at all hereafter we must qualify ourselves. And that is the sole purpose of the life we spend here—to qualify ourselves, to save our soul, that bundle of our doings and our thoughts which we create for ourselves.

Since man must qualify himself for life hereafter, he can merit only complete destruction if he does not tend his soul, as is the purpose of life. I do not believe that there is any such thing as "eternal punishment," because if there is to be punishment there must be life, and that life is to be attained only by man's efforts to qualify his soul here, and such qualification merits not punishment or destruction but the reward of an eternal life.

Forms of "Hookworm" That Are to Be Blamed for Farm Decadence

By PROF. CAMPBELL, Iowa State Teachers' College.

We need not be concerned about the departure of many young people from farm communities. That is a wholesome economic readjustment. There is not room on the farm for every boy and girl born there. What is of vital concern is the fact that it is the big potatoes that are going, leaving the little potatoes to be the parents of the next generation in the farming industry.

If the most capable young people are constantly drained out of the farming communities, leaving the inferiors to be the parents of the next generation, the race of farmers will deteriorate.

Rural life at present is pale and weak. It staggers. It is being led white by hookworms—the hookworm of mortgage indebtedness, the hookworm of the depreciated farm dollar, the hookworm of absentee landlords.

An investigation I recently completed, revealed that 80 to 95 per cent of the young farm people of intelligence and enterprise, the cream of the young people of the community, quit farming because they can find better opportunity in other lines.

Education is a prerequisite of co-operative marketing. The problems of co-operative marketing are too big to be solved by ignorance. There is but one weapon against ignorance, and that is education.

Parents' Duty to Guard Youth Against "Strange and New" of Modern Times

By DR. W. P. DEARING, President Oakland (Ind.) City College.

The greatest need of youth today is just simply their parents. There are certain forces "strange and new" of modern times that the youth must oppose and that parents must watch and train their children to stand against. The child may ask when a problem arises, "Which way's the gang going?" or "Which has the most kick?" or "Which has the most money in it?" but it is the parents' task to make the question "Which is right?" a habit with the son or daughter.

The undertow has many cross-currents. Waste, for instance, America is a nation of prodigals. Think of how our boys and girls live and spend now. If the boys and girls start where we left off as they do, where are they going to stop? Ease is a dangerous current. Taking it easy, the line of least resistance taken by the children, while the parents try to make things as easy as possible, smoothing the rough spots. Strong men and women are not built in a hothouse.

Then there is the present dark shadow of lawlessness over America. Let us see to it that we don't breed it in our homes and schools. All anarchists are not shipped in; some are being bred unconsciously in homes.

Fundamentalism Cause of Lack of Religious Unity and Cooperation

By REV. JOHN HENMAN RENDALL, New York City.

If the Savior were to enter a modern fundamentalism church and hear the theological bosh preached in it he would wonder what the preacher was talking about. Sixty per cent of the population of this country never enter a church, and one reason for that sad state of affairs is that the living dogmas of the dead past have become dead dogmas to the living.

The present generation is not necessarily less religious than former ones, but it regards the old doctrines as "simply Greek." Each religion started with the prophetic type of mind, and had a moral and spiritual message dealing with the kind of life to be lived, not with a creed to be believed. If the founders of all the great religions were alive today they would fraternize and say, "We all worked for the same thing"; but their followers have been intolerant toward each other and humanity has been kept apart.

Religion can exert real influence only when it rises again to the level of its founders and brings about some sort of unity and co-operation within itself.

Work of the Health Department Hindered by Unprogressive Public Opinion

By DR. ARLINGTON AILES, Illinois Health Officer.

Public opinion that is "almost medieval" harasses too many health departments. Frequently in smaller cities the health department is given niggardly support financially; the health officer is harassed by the force of almost medieval public opinion, the relatively unimportant health hobby of some social leaders and the short-sightedness of his city council or commission in the relative value of health expenditures.

The health officer, of course, must decide what he can accomplish with his resources of personnel and money, more or less regardless of this pressure. He must then collect, compile and use his vital statistics with a view to changing this public opinion and presenting cold facts to the sometimes so-called hard-headed board of aldermen, which make the city's appropriations. To them, what happens elsewhere has little weight, but definite figures of their home town have a fascinating tunc.

Vital statistics, properly collected, compiled and used, are probably the most vital function of a health department. It is to the preservation and progress of official public health what bookkeeping is to business. Both must fail without it.

If Back Hurts Flush Kidneys

Drink Plenty of Water and Take Glass of Salts Before Breakfast Occasionally.

When your kidneys hurt and your back feels sore, don't get scared and proceed to load your stomach with a lot of drugs that excite the kidneys and irritate the entire urinary tract. Keep your kidneys clean like you keep your bowels clean, by flushing them with a mild, harmless salts which helps to remove the body's urinous waste and stimulate them to their normal activity.

The function of the kidneys is to filter the blood. In 24 hours they strain from it 500 grains of acid and waste, so we can readily understand the vital importance of keeping the kidneys active.

Drink lots of good water—you can't drink too much; also get from any pharmacist about four ounces of Jad Salts. Take a tablespoonful in a glass of water before breakfast each morning for a few days and your kidneys may then act fine. This famous salts is made from the acid of grapes and lemon juice, combined with lithia, and has been used for years to help clean and stimulate clogged kidneys; also to neutralize the acids in the system so they are no longer a source of irritation, thus often relieving bladder weakness.

Jad Salts is inexpensive; cannot injure; makes a delightful effervescent lithia-water drink which everyone should take now and then to help keep their kidneys clean and active. Try this; also keep up the water drinking, and no doubt you will wonder what became of your kidney trouble and backache.

YOUR STOMACH

Is your stomach out of order? Indigestion, Gas, Heartburn, Bloating, Sick headache, Sour stomach, or similar distress caused by disordered stomach. Then try DYJEST, the most wonderful stomach remedy known. Send us 60c stamps or coin, we will send you DYJEST, post paid anywhere.

MERTES REMEDY CO. 1201 Geneva Ave. SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.

MUDDY, OILY SKIN

Resinol

MITCHELL EYE SALVE

Amusement is to the mind what sunshine is to the flowers.

DEMAND "BAYER" ASPIRIN

Take Tablets Without Fear If You See the Safety "Bayer Cross."

Warning! Unless you see the name "Bayer" on package or on tablets you are not getting the genuine Bayer Aspirin proved safe by millions and prescribed by physicians for 26 years. Say "Bayer" when you buy Aspirin. Imitations may prove dangerous.—Adv.

One admires charity that isn't on parade.

CALIFORNIA DIRECTORY

HOTEL CECIL

A POPULAR PRICE HOTEL OF DISTINCTION Main Street, between Sixth and Seventh Phone Faber 3840 LOS ANGELES 700 ROOMS 300 rooms without bath... $1.50 200 rooms with private toilet $2.00 200 rooms with private bath $2.50 Good Garage Facilities

HOTEL ROOSEVELT

SAN FRANCISCO'S NEW FINE HOTEL Every room with bath or shower. $2.00 to $5.00. Garage next door.

FENNANT-FABROR COACH LINES 1100 Market St., San Francisco. From San Francisco to Portland, one way $24.75 Return $31.50. From San Francisco to Seattle, one way $21.00 Return $27.00.

HOTEL WILTSHIRE, San Francisco 540 Broadway St., near Union Square. 200 Rooms. Outside rooms with bath, $1.50 single, $2.50 double. Court rooms with bath, $1.50 single, $2.50 double. Breakfasts 50c, 60c; Dinners 60c; Sunday $1.00.

SELIG BROS., San Francisco Wholesale Tailors Have our local dealer take your measure for a Satisfaction Guaranteed—ALL-WOOL SUITS. Prices to suit your purse.