BUILD YOUR HOUSE By DOUGLAS MALLOCH MEN hurry home before the approaching storm; When day turns dark, they think of hearths and fires.

When day turns dark, they think of hearths and fires, Some bed to lie in, and a house to warm— When day turns dark these are the heart's desires.

When men go hurrying homeward ways, Home will not fall like manna from the skies— They must have built it in their better days.

No clap of hand will raise a fairy house, No shelter open by some magic deed; To have a roof when winter winds carve a man must build in time of little need.
