A Tough Job!

Abe Martin Says, "One of the toughest jobs in life is to pick a good cat, not because good cats is so scarce, but because dey's so many of them."

That's the problem confronting Mrs. Housewife, when it comes to picking a good grocery store. It's a tough job for her, not because good grocers are scarce, but because there are so many of them.

All other things being equal, the housewife selects the grocer who sells her quality merchandise at the right price and gives her the best service.

The American housewife has become educated to demand quality products. Through the advertising of the manufacturer, she learns the merits of the different products and insists on getting them, and that she does from the grocer who pushes and displays standard advertised brands and who is prepared to supply her with the products she wants and with the services she expects.
