

ENGINE LUBRICATION

The engine lubrication system is an exclusive Ford development and is a combination of pump, gravity feed and splash system with oil reservoir in the valve chamber.

The pump is located in the bottom of the oil pan and is run off a gear on the camshaft on the same shaft which operates the distributor. It is enclosed in a fine mesh wire screen through which the oil filters before it is pumped up into the valve chamber. The screen is surrounded by a shield so that the oil is pulled through it. The oil flows into the valve chamber in a continuous stream whenever the engine is running, but it is no sense a "forced feed."

The oil in the valve chamber provides direct gravity feed lubrication to the main bearings of the crankshaft and the front end camshaft bearing. Small pipe lines lead down from the valve chamber to these bearings. The bottom of the valve chamber is so designed, through the use of small inbuilt dams, to provide reservoirs of oil for each bearing.

As the engine rests in the chassis on a 3 degree angle, sloping to the rear, the oil arriving in the valve chamber flows back, filling each reservoir, the overflow oil being carried by an external pipe to the front end of the oil pan, where it flows back over the pan, filling the troughs through which the connecting rods are lubricated and from which all other moving parts are sprayed by the splash system. From the pan the oil flows to the bottom of the case to be pumped back again.
