DEFENDING THE EIGHTEENTH AMENDMENT

A national publication, which recently published an editorial against the Eighteenth Amendment to the Constitution, publishes a letter from one of its readers, as follows:

"Your editorial would be funny if it were not silly. Men who try to defend an indefensible position always make asses of themselves in the end. No Methodist or Baptist or any other churchman regards prohibition as a tenet of religion. It is a law for the suppression of crime. It is an effort upon the part of a great government, sensible and just, to outlaw a gigantic evil and to prevent a perverted minority from disgracing and debauching the majority with the legalized use of liquor.

"You say: 'Even if capital punishment should come as the next step, we don't believe it will wipe out the use of liquor.'

"That is quite true. Neither has capital punishment wiped out murder and robbery, though statistics amply show that capital punishment is a great detriment to both of these crimes.

"Surely you do not advocate the repeal of laws establishing capital punishment and the licensing of murder and theft, because men still murder and steal in defiance of such laws.

"Prohibition has proven itself; it has vindicated its own name and the judgment of those who brought it to pass. It is here to stay and you whiskey lovers might just as well get over your spasm and become good, sensible Americans."

HOOVER'S TARIFF IDEAS APPROVED

Manufacturers and business men generally appear to be fairly in accord with President Hoover's ideas regarding the desirability of maintaining and extending the flexible provisions of the existing tariff law. Whether the politicians will agree with the policies outlined by the president in his special message to Congress remains to be seen.

Commenting on the message, the executive committee of the National Association of Manufacturers recently issued a statement through its president in which full approval of the Hoover proposals was expressed. It said:

"Commercial preparedness demands a flexible means of adapting our protective policy to any economic menace to American social standards or our capacity for steady employment at our established wage levels. A static tariff is impractical in a dynamic industrial world."

Briefly, the Hoover idea is that general tariff policies should be defined by Congress, but that the details should be largely administered by the President upon the advice of a highly qualified tariff commission continuously engaged in fact-finding studies upon which to base its recommendations—all to be removed as far as possible from the influence of partisan politics.

It is a business-like, common sense plan, to which no valid objection can reasonably be made.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Having decided to locate and live among and with you in your fair little city of Estacada I deem it proper and appropriate to tell you at this time that my reason for coming to your city is threefold; first I have been for some time and I am yet in poor health and was told by several doctors that a higher altitude would in all probability be a benefit to me.

Second, there is no variety store here and therefore I consider it from a business standpoint, to give the people of Estacada and surrounding neighborhood an opportunity to buy the same goods at the same prices as the people in the big cities.

The third reason is to make friends as I think good friendship and good fellowship is more precious than money, to do some one a favor, help them carry their burden, that have difficulties and troubles, for if we should die tomorrow and have done nobody any good but ourselves we have not done right.

These are my sentiments, and I am trying to live up to them and ask all of you to be friends and join in and help to make this world a better place to live in. I promise to be fair and square in all my dealings, to make a plain, honest living and I hope that I shall never regret coming to Estacada. I am asking for some of your patronage. Come and see me soon and often.

Yours truly,
H. A. ROEHLING.
