TECHNICIANS TRANSFORM BRIGHT DAY INTO NIGHT

One of the most brilliant pieces of work ever done within the confines of a motion picture studio was recently accomplished at the Paramount studio in Hollywood. Technicians turned the brightest California day into a black night, and, what's more, kept it that way.

The work was done for "The Docks of New York," starring George Bancroft, to show at the Liberty Theatre, Estacada, Sunday and Monday, May 12 and 13. Josef von Sternberg directed.

Inasmuch as almost all of the action of the play is done at night, it fell to the lot of the technicians to prepare a set in which no outside ray of light would be permitted to enter. The set was built on one of the massive stages and transformed the scene into a honky-tonk inn located along the waterfront of New York. A huge black canvas hung all around the set, and the actors and technicians toiled for several weeks with only a ray of light from a large spotlight flooding the scene.

On many occasions the actors saw the light of day only upon going to work in the morning. They were kept on the set long after the sun had set, when, emerging, they stepped out into a real night.

Bancroft's new starring picture is one of the best he has ever done to date. The story is an original one from the pen of John Monk Saunders, who wrote "Wings" and "The Legion of the Condemned."

He is supported by an able cast, including Betty Compson, Baclanova, Clyde Cook, Mitchell Lewis and Gustav von Seyffertitz, among others.

The demonstration model bridge the forest service has been building across the Zig Zag is made out of logs from timber grown in that section and is expected to last 50 years. The bridge is 110 feet long. This bridge opens the "Tract M" road, another government home site tract.

At the Jersey Cattle Club meeting held April 11, it was decided that the boys' and girls' Jersey dairy clubs would show their animals at the Spring Jersey show, and at this show the pure bred Jersey heifer awarded to Gordon Andrus by Buxton Bros., at the Pacific International last fall, will be presented.
