ECONOMIC HIGHLIGHTS

A great deal of the President's late talk was given to a restatement of his foreign policy so there was nothing particularly new in it except for a definitely more aggressive tone when he spoke of Hitler and the Axis. However Mr. Roosevelt emphasized a few points which are of the highest importance and which he had not covered in the same way before.

First, he made it perfectly clear that, in the Administrations' viewpoint our present policy is not just an idealistic attempt to save England and the British Empire, that to the contrary it is based on cold, hard principles of self-interest. He is convinced that if England falls we will be next on Hitler's list, and that the wise course is to keep the fighting out of this hemisphere if possible.

Second, he said categorically that sea control will be the determining issue: "If the Axis powers fail to gain control of the seas they will certainly be defeated. Therefore he and his supporters reason, it is necessary that we keep the democracies present control of the oceans intact."

Third, he intimated that this country in self-defense, may find it necessary to control certain areas in this hemisphere which now belong to German dominated France, Dakar, the Cape Verde Islands, etc. Of these possessions it is probable that only Dakar which is a fairly well fortified position would be difficult to take over.

Fourth, and very important, he spoke tellingly of "freedom of the seas." To millions of Americans the words carried them right back to 1916. "Freedom of the seas" was President Wilson's cardinal point of disagreement with imperial Germany, and it was Wilson's insistence on this point that finally brought us actively into the war. When we passed the Neutrality Act at the beginning of the present war, we by indirection, abandoned that old policy. And while the President has said he sees no reason for repealing the Neutrality Act it is clear that he has no intention of accepting Germany's version of the rules of war as they apply to the ship traffic of non-belligerents. Many think that the statute books is pretty much of a dead letter, at this time the President's powers are so vast and so sweeping and his hacking in Congress is so great, that laws can be construed pretty much as he wants.

The President seems certain that American participation in this war can be limited to air and naval action of one kind or another. "While preparing his speech he referred frequently to this" says columnist Alsop and Kintner, "while arguing that Germany could be strangled by sea power and that no large American expeditionary force would be needed to conquer her." In other words the President is thinking of a long war of attrition.

Highlight of the speech was his announcement of an "unlimited national emergency." The legal hair splitters will be arguing for a long time just what powers this gives him that he didn't already possess under the "limited emergency" proclaimed over a year ago. He can commandeer factories, control the radio and perhaps the press, ration basic materials etc. but, say some authorities he could have done all this anyway with his "limited emergency" powers. One point of view is that the "unlimited emergency" proclamation was at least merely for psychological effect to stiffen up the country and make it more aware of its problems. Some think it was also partly directed at malcontents in the ranks of labor. The sections of the President's speech in which he spoke of labor and said that the decisions of the government mediators must be accepted by all concerned, are said to be in some quarters significant.

Aid Society Does Wonderful Work

He was found two years ago in a dark, dingy attic room tied to a bed post, pathetically small, pathetically neglected. His tiny body was covered with ugly bruises and sores. He was abandoned, a one-year-old, by both parents, abandoned, abused, alone.

But today Tommy is a healthy, wholesome child whose eyes light at the sight of a new kiddie car, whose sturdy legs carry him happily about his play. He has new parents, a new home, love and affection which he had never known before. He has a chance now, a chance to live and grow up like any other boy.

There are hundreds of tales like that of little Tommy's to be told by staff members of the Boys and Girls aid society of Oregon. They are true stories, stories of unhappiness and insecurity and abuse, stories of tiny tots who've been left with no one in the world who cares for them, of brave boys and girls who've had to go on alone. They are vital, human stories but they read like fiction, because, like the tale of little Tommy they have happy endings.

The 55-year history of the Boys and Girls aid society has written happy endings to more than 7,300 of these stories. These thousands of children have been brought to the doors of the society from Oregon's cities, towns and country. Some of them are abandoned, some of them have lost their parents, still others are relinquished temporarily by parents or relatives until a home can be re-established. They all need food, clothing and a home.

The Boys and Girls aid originally was established to care for stowaways on sailing vessels and homeless, parentless waifs who haunted the streets for a better place of abode. As years passed and the number of children needing care increased, a superintendent was employed and an institution set up which provided food, shelter and clothing. A new system of child care was inaugurated in 1939 conforming with modern and proven social welfare practice. The foster home plan on which the organization now operates places all the children under supervision in homes with private families. The society finds the homes, places the children provides funds for board, supplies clothing and medical and dental care. The Boys and Girls aid society today is an up-to-date, efficient child welfare agency staffed with skilled, experienced workers an organization geared to meet the physical and emotional needs of the dependent child. Its primary rule is to keep the child happy and healthy.

Ages of the children cared for by the organization range from infancy to 18 years. At the present time the agency has 355 children under its supervision.

Funds are provided thru state and county aid, thru a yearly allotment by the Portland Community chest, thru endowments, contributions and memberships. At present a fund raising campaign is being conducted on a statewide basis to raise money to meet the rising cost of living, to buy shirts and shoes and overalls for the boys and dresses and coats for the girls who comprise the society's family, to buy glasses for children with defective eyesight, and to pay the doctor for setting broken arms and treating cases of measles.

C. C. Chapman is president of the society and Mrs. Myrtle C. Daizel is state director. Administrative offices are located at 1504 S. W. 11th, Portland.
