Thruout the existing emergency the Scottish Rite news bureau has been level headed, visualizing as it does the fact that the triumph of Hitler means the economic ruin of the United States with its workers on the same basis as those of Europe, laboring 72 hours a week for a bare subsistence. Pointing out that Hitler is all prepared to dominate South America in a business way the bureau has this pertinent comment: "Even many of those who are for an outright declaration of war fail to see the probable course of history in the event of a nazi triumph. Many pro-British isolationists in favor of defending the forty-eight states alone like to sit back in smug comfort and sort of enjoy the passing parade of swastikas to the east, west and south and sustain ourselves on all this bountiful nation holds. The picture is tempting but a bit foolhardy. The downright fickleness of that dream is well illustrated in Adolf Hitler's gigantic plan for world economy not to mention his oft-stated desire to control South American commerce. The most immediate result of Hitler's plan if it were allowed to take effect is the total economic destruction of this republic.

"Destruction will not necessarily come by invasion. Hitler's designs on this hemisphere are tied up with a well-knit industrial plan even now under full steam in the conquered countries of Holland, Belgium, Denmark, France, Norway and Poland. Contrary to popular belief Hitler is having little difficulty in gearing the industries of those countries for post-war production. The trouble Hitler was supposed to have in assimilating conquered countries has been largely imaginary.

"It is also untrue that Hitler is failing to produce goods for trade and munitions of war at the same time. From this ingenious industrial setup Hitler expects to undersell the world with low-cost goods produced by slave labor. And the nazis have done all this in the midst of a great war effort.

"Complete loss of trade would ruin this nation, economic experts almost unanimously agree. It is not difficult to see that with Great Britain and Africa under Hitler's thumb the United States would have extremely tough going to keep from being outdistanced in producing for war or trade. This would be true even if Hitler left South America untouched."
