RESERVE ENLISTMENTS DECLARED ATTRACTIVE

Vancouver Barracks, Wash. New, shorter, ready reserve obligations for young men in the 17 to 18 1-2 year old bracket make enlistment in the Army Reserve more attractive than ever before it was announced today by Colonel Willard B. Carlock, Chief of the U. S. Army Military District, Oregon.

These new obligations shorten the period of participation in ready reserve training to three years after the individual completes his six months of active training. This compares with the previous requirement of a total active duty and ready reserve training obligation of five years, Colonel Carlock stated.

This option allows the high school men a one year deferment after enlistment before taking the six month active duty training.

A phase of the program currently in effect is slated to expire on April 1, the Colonel stated. This phase allows men to join the Army Reserve for 6 years with no active duty obligation. This program also permits the man to request 6 months active training at a later date more convenient for him.

The six month training program is now open to men in the 26 to 35 year age bracket. These men may enlist for three years in the Army Reserve and then serve six months of active duty training. This training must be started within 120 days after enlistment, Colonel Carlock concluded.

"PGE ELECTRICITY takes a lot of work and worry out of brooding..."

says Mr. Henry W. Goode, Donald, Oregon

Electricity saves money in many ways

"I knew electricity was good but I didn't realize how good until I installed electric brooders," says Mr. Goode. "To begin with, you get uniform heat... each unit has its own thermostat. There are no 'hot spots' to harm the birds or cause crowding, no burning of valuable oxygen. Our loss has been only 1/2 of 1% in 4 weeks as compared to the ordinary loss of 1% the first week. And the birds are healthier too... we estimate an extra 1000 pounds of meat per batch.

Then too, there's no fuel problem, no leaks to worry about, no fire worry. As far as I'm concerned PGE electricity is a hired hand I wouldn't be without."

Why don't you call your nearest PGE farm expert and have him show you how PGE electricity can help with your farm tasks?
