Fish Ladder Takes Shape; Crane Set for Big Pour

Sportsmen will be interested in the progress being made on the construction of the fish ladder which will extend from below Portland General Electric's Cazadero dam to the North Fork dam. Shown in the top picture at lower left is the fish trap. The ramps of the fish ladder can be faintly seen along the bank running to and from the trap. The fish ladder will be 8,000 feet long and 10 feet wide. The gentleman in the picture is one of the engineers on the project.

Last Saturday, the Guy F. Atkinson Co. was engaged in the major chore of moving the 200 H.P. whirly crane from the river bed to its perch on this 50 foot trestle which will be its home until the job is completed. This 50 foot lift will increase the whirly's reach to 220 feet which will enable it to make the top pour of 185 feet for the dam. The trestle will be extended across the Clackamas as the dam progresses.

At the lower right, the diversion-slucing tunnels can be seen. The river will flow through these tubes when it is diverted which is planned around Aug. 10.

Local Television Program Appreciated Over KGW-TV; Dr. Price Comments

Five intrepid local citizens braved the batteries of lights and cameras last Friday at 1 P.M. on channel 8 to do a supportive job of presenting the Estacada story to the thousands of viewers who watched this half-hour production. These gentlemen put Estacada's best foot forward as they systematically unraveled the accomplishments of our town over the past two and a half years. The program portion in which the local panel participated was exactly twenty-eight and one-half minutes long, uninterrupted by commercials or other continuity breaks and was presented with a smoothness and poise which belied the amateur status of the performers. Estacada was awarded this program by educational director of KGW-TV because of our outstanding civic deeds since the start of 1955 and it was the job of the panel to present this tale in an interesting and coordinated manner. The station gave Estacada this time for the program, but left the responsibility of determining the format, of selecting the participants, of working out a basic script and of working out the delicate timing entirely up to local resources.

When the time for the program was at hand, the announcer introduced Bob Cooke, city recorder and municipal judge, as the moderator of the panel and that was it. The local boys were completely on their own for twenty eight and one-half long minutes. Judge Cooke gave a greeting to the viewers and then introduced the panel. A map was then shown on the screen as Mayor Bob Weinrich explained to the viewers just exactly where Estacada is located. With this orientation taken care of, the cameras moved over to Dave Horner, who had the job of presenting the background information so that the audience could better understand the problems facing the town and what improvements were badly needed. Dave moved through his material smoothly and the hypnotic eye of the camera then became focused on Ray Hayden, charter member of the city planning commission, whose lot was to explain and enumerate the projects and improvements initiated by this group. Ray had the longest time in front of the camera, appearing for just 15 seconds short of ten minutes. He did a marvelous job, presenting his information with a great deal of poise and in a nicely relaxed manner. We know he was plenty nervous but this was not apparent at all to the viewing audience. At this point, the only nos-Estacadan on the panel took over his part. Jack Caldwell, our city attorney, explained the effect of all this surge of governmental activity on the legal department. Next in line was Jim Anderson, publisher of the Clackamas County News and representative of the Upper Clackamas Chamber of Commerce. Jim's portion included some pictures of new business structures in the town and many comments concerning recreational advantages of this area along with a welcome to anyone who would like to visit us. Jim was probably the most completely at ease of any of the panel members and injected a nice spark of humor in the program by referring to Estacada as the "damdest" town in Oregon with all the PGE hydroelectric projects along this part of the Clackamas. This provided a well-timed change of pace and set the stage for the Mayor's remarks concerning the future outlook for Estacada, as the closing portion of the program. His Honor has a remarkably fine speaking voice over the airways and his comments made a dignified, optimistic closing to the panel program. Moderator Cooke then made his final remarks and thanked us and Estacada's television program was over.

The station immediately began receiving calls from viewers commenting favorably on all aspects of this presentation and KGW-TV officials remarked that it was one of the best programs in the city series. They were very pleased with the whole thing. The citizens of this area owe the panel members a large vote of thanks for the wonderful way in which they presented the Estacada story. The town gained thousands of dollars of free advertising by this presentation and Estacada has assumed a new significance and dignity in the eyes of the many viewers who watched this outstanding production. —Courtesy of The Kiwanis Bulletin.

Your County Fair To Be Bigger and Better This Year

CANBY, ORE. — Extensive improvements to the grounds and buildings have been made for the 51st annual Clackamas County Fair which will open here Wednesday, Aug. 14, for a four day run.

The main pavilion, livestock barns and grandstand have been re-roofed, many buildings painted, a new mobile stage built for shows at the grandstand. Exhibit space has been enlarged for the photography department and also poultry and rabbits.

The floral building, built in 1956, has been improved to take care of more flower exhibits. An ornamental fountain with colored lights has been installed in the center of the exhibit space. Landscape plantings have been made around the U-shaped structure in the fir grove.

Closing date for livestock entries is 5 P.M. Saturday, Aug. 3, but later entries will be accepted if stall space is available. Until the closing date entries will be restricted to Clackamas county breeders. If space is available after that date, other entries will be considered.

Barbecue dinners will be served in the fir grove on each of the four days, starting at 5 P.M. Wednesday night's barbecue will be sponsored by the Clackamas County Broiler association. Thursday night the Oregon City Chamber of Commerce will put on a chicken barbecue. Friday night the Canby Junior Chamber of Commerce will barbecue a 1000 pound steer with Sheriff Joe Shobe as chief cook. Saturday the joint service clubs of Northern Clackamas County will provide the dinner.

Everything inside the fairgrounds except food and carnival attractions will be free during this year's fair. The only admission charge will be at the gates. Stage shows will be presented Wednesday and Thursday nights by groups of talented amateurs from Portland.

Band concerts will be given in the center of the exhibition grounds each afternoon from 2 to 4.

The tenth national Appaloosa horse show will provide afternoon and evening entertainment Friday and Saturday, Aug. 16-17. Horses of this colorful breed have been entered from a dozen states and Canada.

The Appaloosa Horse Club, Inc., with headquarters at Moscow, Idaho, has arranged the program and will provide its own premiums and purses. The shows will be staged in front of the grandstand, and additional bleacher seats have been built for spectators.

Part of the Appaloosa show will be pure exhibition, but each day's program will include numerous working horse events which are contests, some of them copied from the Nez Perce Indians, original breeders of these animals.

Besides short distance running races the contests will include the Camas Prairie Stump Race, the Rope Race, and the Nez Perce Stake Race. Trials will also be staged of animals entered as regular stock horses or trail horses.

Historians say the distinctive Appaloosa breed was developed by the Nez Perces over a period of more than 200 years. Mounds with the peculiar dappled markings over the hind quarters were highly prized by the tribe whose braves were probably the most skillful horsemen among all the natives.

After Chief Joseph's defeat in 1877 the Nez Perce were dispersed and for 60 years the breed was apparently lost. About 20 years ago horse and history enthusiasts began collecting the best of the descendants of the Nez Perce mounds. The present Appaloosa breed is the result. More than 3000 horses are now registered in the records of the Appaloosa Horse Club, Inc.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Marshall and Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Ahnert returned last week from British Columbia where they spent several weeks among the numerous lakes of that section where the fishing is great
