

BLOOM LIKE FLOWERS? THEN IT'S NOT RAGWEED

Calls and visits to the state department of agriculture show many persons are still confused on what is ragweed and what is tansy ragwort.

Here is a quick guide: if the weed has yellow flowers or blooms, it is tansy ragwort—or possibly Klamath weed, also known as goat weed. You can see the 'bloom' which is really more like a faint yellow dust, on ragweed until you get right up to the plant. You can see tansy ragwort's yellow flowers many feet distant.

The department is now engaged in spraying without cost to landowners a ragweed infestation in western Oregon. It has no authority or funds to spray tansy ragwort.

At the end of the first two weeks (August 28) of the new ragweed program, Supervisor George H. Moore says the special spray equipment had operated on about 1800 acres of spotted to heavy infestations in Marion, Clackamas, Benton and Polk counties.

More ragweed has been found east of Salem in Marion county; Clackamas has not been completely covered. The department reports ragweed in Lane county on county road south of Eugene and an unverified infestation in that county. Public agencies are treating ragweed found on their land.

Let's Go On A "Quicknic"

Canned meats are the ideal basis for an impromptu meal that's easy to carry, ready to eat, and yet provides all the flavorful goodness you expect from the meat course. "Quicknics" are just as much fun as the picnics requiring considerable advance planning. The important thing is to be sure there is plenty to eat for everyone.

A canned pork and beef luncheon loaf such as Swift's Prem fits perfectly into picnic plans. The meat is seasoned the way you like it and is thoroughly cooked and ready to serve as you take it from the can. This means you are not limited to picnic spots where building is permitted.

Once the meat is selected, the rest of the picnic takes shape quickly. Crisp relishes pack well as do slices of bread which were spread before leaving home and then wrapped in waxed paper. A thermos of coffee or milk and fresh fruit for dessert completes the menu. Paper plates and cups keep cleanup afterwards down to a minimum. Such "quicknics" with family or friends are fun as well as filling when you let tasty canned meats take the work out of packing a lunch.

VITAMIN FUNCTIONS IN HEALTHY HUMANS AIM OF OSC STUDY

New evidence on ways vitamins function in normal health by humans is being sought by Oregon State college nutritionists.

To learn what vitamin needs are for the normal healthy adult, and to find ways to measure vitamin absorption in the tissues is the study's aim.

To determine vitamin requirements of normal healthy adults, four persons went on identical 30 day constant diets to measure vitamin levels of vitamin C (ascorbic acid) and three B vitamins—B (thiamine) B (riboflavin) and niacin. Researchers measured the vitamin levels in different fractions of the blood—the red and white cells and the serum or plasma.
